A HISTORY OF PERSIAN LANGUAGE & LITERATURE AT THE MUGHAL COURT

PART II—HUMĀYŪN

CHAPTER I

After Bābur's death, which took place at Āgra, his eldest son Humāyūn ascended the throne in

Humāyūn's accession to the throne.

Congratulatory
poems.

937 A. H. The court poets composed congratulatory poems of which the following chronogram was cleverly devised mourning in one and the same breath for Bābur's death and exulting at Humāyūn's accession to the throne :

۱ شه خسرواں شاه بابر که داشت
 دو صد بنده مانند جمشید و محمد همایون بجایش نشست
 چو طومار عمرش اجل کرده طے
 چو پرسند تاریخ اے دل بگو
 همایون بود وارث ملک وے

¹ Mirzā 'Alāud daula Qazwīnī, Nafā'is ul Ma'āsir (abridged), B.M. MSS., Or. 1761, fol. 27a.

The year of his accession was “Khair-ul-mulūk” (the best of kings).

Again, when Humāyūn defeated Sultān Bahādur Gujarātī in a pitched battle at Mandsūr near Mālwa, the following qit‘a was composed to commemorate the date of this victory :

همایوں شاہ غازی آنکہ اوراست
ہزاراں بندہ چون جمشید در خور
بفیروزی چو آمد سوئے گجرات
مظفر گشت فخر آل تیمور
بہادر چون ذلیل و خوار گردید (تیمور ۱۲)
شدہ تاریخ آن دل بہادر

Humāyūn is king, Ghāzī, and more,
Thousands of slaves like Jamshīd him serve;
In victory, when he came to Gujarāt,
Triumphed the ‘pride of Timūr’s race,’
Bahādur, when fell so low and in disgrace,
The date was found in ‘zill i Bahādur’ (Bahādur’s disgrace).

Similarly when the fort of Champānēr was subdued by Humāyūn’s forces, the following verse was composed by the court poets in attendance :

تاریخ ظفر یافتن شاہ ہمایوں

² Ibid., p. 347.

The date of Humāyūn's gaining victory,
Wisdom sought and found in 'nuh i Shahr i
Safar būd' (it was the 9th of Safar).

This chronogram is most ingeniously devised since its very words tell the date and the month, while the year is to be found in the numerical value of its letters. Such niceties in the art of composition date from the reign of Humāyūn, and were developed in the reigns of Akbar, Jahāngir, Shāhjahān, and Aurangzēb.

He was born at Cābul of Bābur's first wife, Māham Bēgum, in 913 A. H., which is synchronous with Bābur's adoption of the title of Pādishāh. The date of his birth

His birth and education, was found by many poets in their metrical compositions, of which the following is from the pen of Bābur's trusted noble Khwāja Kalān:

سال مولود همايون شاعست

زادك الله تعالى قدرا

برده ام يك الف از تاريكش

تا كشم ميل دو چشم بدرا

It is the year of the birth of Humāyūn Shāh,

May God increase thy rank and dignity;

I have carried off one 'alif' from his chronogram,²

So that I may apply with it collyrium to the two eyes of the evil.

¹ Naqsh 'Alī, Tazkira i Bāgh i Ma'ānī (abridged and bound with Nafā'is ul Ma'āsir), B.M. MSS. Or. 1761, fol. 151b.

² This means that the chronogram is short by 1.

Short phrases also, as was customary with poets on such occasions, were ingeniously constructed giving the date of his birth, to indicate his future greatness and kingly career. Some of these are as follows :

سلطان ہمایوں خان	...	[Sultān Humāyūn Khān]
شاہ فیروز قدر	...	[Shāh Firūz Qadr]
پادشاہ صف شکن	...	[Pādishāh Saf-Shikan]
خوش باد	...	[Khush Bād]

In his early youth he was trained under the fostering care of his father's learned secretaries Khwāja Kalān and Shaikh Zainuddin. His father also paid personal attention to his education and used to correct in his letters mistakes of spelling and diction every now and then.¹

While quite young he developed a taste for Mathematics and Astronomy in the association of Shaikh Abul Qāsim Astrābādī², Mullā Nūruddīn,³ and the celebrated astronomer Maulānā Ilyās.⁴ He seemed to have little liking for Turkī, and employed it on few occasions only. The rapidly dwindling influence of Turkī at his court is clearly noticeable. While Bābur had tried all his life to raise the status of Turkī, Humāyūn, in inverse ratio, neglected it from deference to the feelings of the Persians at his court, as well as his own liking for Persian.

² Bā Yazīd, Tārīkhī Humāyūn, I.O. MSS. No 223, fol. 24b.

³ Akbar Nāma, Vol. I, p. 223.

⁴ Badāūnī, Vol. III, p. 131.

The only instances of his Turki composition that could be discovered are the following :

(i) A few letters that he wrote to his father.

(ii) Occasional verses that he composed. of which, however, no trace could be found, except of one which is preserved in his name as follows :

امن كه بلبل ايك كلمي دين كو بمشام اهنك يله
اوت ساليب تور خاتمه , خساره كلونك يله

The occasions on which he appreciated Turki verses were also few :

“ After my presentation I offered the Emperor a small gift and a chronogram upon the conquest of India – also two ghazals, all of which pleased the Pādishāh greatly.”²

“ About the same time Āgra fell into the hands of the Pādishāh. I immediately wrote a chronogram for the occasion which found much favour. The incident furnished the material for a ‘ghazal’ with which the sovereign was so delighted that he called me a second Mir ‘Ali Shīr.”³

³ Ibid., pp. 49-50.

Even in his private conversations he used Turkī rarely. On two occasions he spoke it merely with the object that his other courtiers might not understand him. One such occasion was at the blinding of Kāmrān. When 'Alī Dost, a trusted servant of Humāyūn, came to give him certain news about it with a view to take his further instructions in the matter, Humāyūn was surrounded by people, and this was apparently why the servant chose to communicate the object of his visit in Turkī, saying :

Turkī rarely employed in his private conversation.

بوايشيكا هيچ كسى قلميدور

Nobody does this work,

whereupon Humāyūn abusing him said :

ايتي قلتاق سن غانه بولب تور سن قلنك

What is wrong with thee, do it thyself.

The other occasion was when on account of the scarcity of water and the monopoly of the available well by Tardī Bēg, the entire menial staff had conspired against him and made their complaint to Humāyūn. Humāyūn thereupon rode up to Tardī Bēg and spoke to him in Turkī merely to avoid his being understood

² Ibid.

یک مغل بدست میرزا قلی چولی افتاد که بر روی او
 زخم محکم بود گرفته بدر گاه حضرت پادشاه آورد بزبان
 ترکی عرض کرد که این شخص آنکس است که بحضرت
 پادشاه ناسزا گفته بود فرمودند که بجزای خود رسیده
 است -

A Mughal on whose face there was a deep wound fell into the hands of Mirzā Qulī Chūlī. Having arrested him he brought him to the court of His Majesty and said in Turki language that the captive was that person who used unworthy language in respect of the Pādishāh. His Majesty replied that the wretch had received his reward.

One instance of his voluntarily employing Turki while speaking to a Turk is as follows :

دو شخص رومی در بازار بودند که بحضرت پادشاه
 سلام کردند حضرت فرمودند که من دن دعاده یعنی ازما
 بیادشاه روم دعا بده ایشان گفتند که کوز اوچم یعنی
 بچشم -

Two persons of Rūm were in the market. They saluted His Majesty. His Majesty replied, 'min dan du'ā dih,' i.e., from me to the king of Rūm convey greetings. They rejoined, 'kūz ou cham,' i.e., heartily or with great pleasure.

CHAPTER II

While for Turki he seems to have had an aversion, for Persian he had a special liking. He encouraged it at his court and himself employed it on all public and private occasions. His taste for Persian poetry. He also compiled a 'diwān'¹ using 'Humāyūn' as his pen-name. His best poetry is to be found in his 'ghazal.'

Some specimens are as follows :
'Ghazal.'

غزل
 کار من بامهوشی افتاده است
 در درونم آتشی افتاده است
 خانه ام روشن شد از روی حبیب
 هر قوی از مهوشی افتاده است
 دل مرا ای جان بهر سومی کشد
 تا دلم با دلکشی افتاده است
 کام دل خواهم گرفتن این زمان
 چون بدستم سر خوشی افتاده است
 عقل و هوش از من مجوئید ای بتان
 چون همایون بیمهشی افتاده است

² Nafā'is ul Ma'āsir, B.M. MSS., Or. 1761, fol. 39a.

The arrow of his tyranny pierced my bewildered heart,
My wounded heart has tasted the sweetness of the pang of his love :

¹ Ibid.

Through my tyrannic wisdom my heart was rent,
Call me Thy mad lover, and free me from all cares.

ای دل ز حضور یار فیروزی کن^۱
در خدمت او بصدق دلسوزی کن
هر شب بخیال دوست خرم بنشین
هر روز بوصل یار نوروزی کن

O heart, reap success from the presence of the beloved,
Burn your heart in all sincerity in his service :
Every night sit jubilant in the thought of thy friend,
Every day celebrate a new year's day in union with him.

اے آنکہ جفای تو بعالم علم است^۲
روزی که ستم نه بینم از تو ستم است
هر غم که رسد از ستم چرخ بدل
مارا جو غم عشق تو باشد چه غم است

O thou whose tyranny is well-known all the world over,
The day on which I do not experience severity from thee is severe ; Whatever grief reaches the heart from the oppression of the sky,

^۱ Fārishta, Vol. I, p. 446.

^۲ Akbar Nāma, Vol. I, p. 368.

I care not for, so long as I have the grief of thy love in me.

۱ اے آنکہ زیاد و تو دلم باشد شاد
بی یاد تو خاطر دمے شاد مباد
روزیکہ زیاد تو کنم صد فریاد
آیا ز من غمزدات آید یاد

O thou from whose memory my heart gains joy,
Without thy memory my soul no joy can know ;
The day that in thy memory a hundred cries I raise,
Come to thee of me, the grief-stricken, remembrance ?

Once in his appeal to Kāmran for peace, he subscribed the following verses purporting that for every drop of blood spilt, Kāmran would be answerable before God on the day of judgment :

۲ بود خون آن قوم در گردنت
بود دست آن جمع در دامن
همان به که بر صلم راے آوری
طریق مروت بجای آوری

¹ Nafā'is ul Ma'āsir, B.M. MSS., Or. 1761, fol. 40a.

² Akbar Nāma, Vol. I, p. 278.

Cf. Kāmran's blunt reply to Humāyūn's generous appeal :
عروس ملک کسی در کنار گیرد تنگ که بوسه بر لب شمشیر آبدار دهد
He alone holds fast the bride of kingdom,
Who kisses the lip of the sharp sword.

[Farishta, Vol. I, p. 351.]

The blood of that people hangs on thy neck,
 The hand of that band is on thy skirt ;
 Better is that thou decidest on peace,
 And showeth the manner of kindliness and generosity.

An instance of his composing masnawī is to be found in one of his letters which he addressed to Bairām Khān on the occasion of the conquest of Qandhār :

باز فتح کے ز غیب روی نمود کہ دل دوستان ازو بکشد
 شکر للہ کہ باز شادانیم بر رخ یار و دوست خندا نیم
 دشمنان را بکام دل دیدیم میوہ باغ فتح را چیدیم
 روز نوروز بمرم است امروز دل احباب بے غم است امروز
 شاد بادا ہمیشہ خاطر یار غم نگر دد بگرد یار و دیار
 ہمہ اسباب عیش آماد است دل بفکر و صالت افتاد است
 کہ جمال حبیب کے بینم گل ز باغ وصال کے چینم
 گوش خرم شود ز گفتارت دیدہ روشن شود ز دیدارت
 در حریم حضور شاد بہم بنشینیم خرم و بے غم
 بعد ازاں فکر کار ہند کنیم عزم تسخیر ملک سند کنیم
 ہر در بستہ کشادہ شود ہرچہ خواہیم ازان زیادہ شود
 انچہ خواہیم از زمان و زمین گوید آمین جبرئیل امین
 یا الہی میسر م گرد آں دو جہاں را مستخرم گرداں

¹ Ibid.

Again a victory showed its face from Invisibility,
That the hearts of friends cheered to see it ;
Thanks be to God that we are again happy,
And we smile on the faces of companions and friends ;
We saw our enemies with the object of their heart achieved,
We plucked the fruit of the garden of victory ;
To-day is the Bairām's New Year's day ;
The heart of friends is without a grief to-day ;
The heart of the dear one be ever happy, Grief may not go near to his heart, nor to his native town ;
All the requisite material for comfort is ready,
My heart is anxious for union with thee ;
When would it be that I see the beauty of the loved one,
When would I pluck the flower of the garden of union with him ;
When should my ear become happy in listening to thy speech,
And my eye lighted through seeing thy face ;
In the sanctuary of thy presence happy together,
We sit cheerful and without a grief ;
After this we turn our care to the affairs of India,
Resolved to subdue the kingdom of Sindh ;
Every door that is shut will be opened,
Whate'er we wished, more than that shall we gain ;

One day the emperor planned a little excursion on horse-back to visit the graves of the holy Sheikhs of Lahore, and I accompanied
 His appreciation of Persian poets. him. We visited the graves of Shāh Qutbeddin the Pir of Delhi, of Sheikh Nizām Weli, Sheikh Ferid Shekr-Ghendj, Mir Khosru Dehlevi and Mir Husein Dehlevi. When the conversation turned upon the poetical works of Mir Khosru, I quoted some of his best poems, and under their influence I conceived a most telling distich. I turned to the emperor saying, 'It would be presumption on my part to measure my powers against those of Mir Khosru, but he has inspired me, and I would fain recite my couplet before your Majesty.' 'Let us hear it,' said Humāyūn, and I recited the following:

هر که قانع شد بیک نان هاره مرد مهترست
 کار او از جمله شاهان عالم بهترست

¹ Sidi 'Alī Re'is-Mir'at ul Mamālik, p. 35, Iqdām Press, Stambūl, 1313 A. H.

Cf. Khusrau's original verses:

کوس شه خالی و بانگ غلغلش درد سر است
 هر که قانع شد بپششک و تر شه بهر و بر است
 مرد پنهان در گلیه پادشاه عالم است
 تیغ خفته در نیامه پاسبان کشور است

HUMĀYŪN WITH HIS PET HAWK, AND THE YOUNG PRINCE AKBAR.

[Exhibit : 1911 Exhibition, Allahabad.]

From his own verses which include almost all principal kinds of poetry except 'qasida' and, qit'a,¹ his position as a poet of the Persian language is clearly established. In his 'rubā'i' and 'ghazal' while behind no one, he stands ahead of many of his contemporaries. The chief feature of his style is the clearness of expression which pervades all his writings, and his words are always few, simple, and compact.

¹ One instance of same as found in some Persian works like the Ātashkada, p. 39 (edited by Bland, London, 1844), and the Majma'ul, Fusahā, p. 62, is as follows. This he is said to have written to Shāh Tahmāsp after his arrival in Persia :

خسروا عمریت تا عنقائے عالی همت
قله قاف قناعت را نشیمن کرده است
روز گاری سفلہ گندم نمائے جو فروش
طوطی طبع مرا قانع به ارزن کرده است
دشمنم شیر است و عمری پیش برمن کرده بود
حالیا از روء خصمی روء برمن کرده است
دارم اکنون التماس از شه که تا با من کند
انچه با سلمان علی در دشت ارزن کرده است

It may be noted that the last line with but slight variation occurs in Salmān Sāwajī's 'qit'a' as follows :

از خدا امید دارم شایه با ما آن کند
انچه با سلمان عای در دشت ارزن کرده است

Also, he is said to have sent to the Shāh a 'rubā'i' of which only one line could be traced as under :

شاهان همه سایه هما می خواهند بنگر که هما آمده در سایه تو

To this the Shāh's reply was the following :

همایه اوج سعادت بدام ما افتد اگر ترا گنوی در مقام ما افتد

Once during his flight to Persia, Mullā Hairatī, a poet of Trans-Caspian Province, presented him with a 'ghazal' of which the opening lines ran thus :

His poetic insight : corrects Hairatī and Jāhī.¹

دگه دل از عشق بتان گه جگرم میسوزد
 عشق هر لحظه بداغ دگرم میسوزد
 همچو پروانه به شمع سرکار است مرا
 که اگر پیش روم بال و پرم میسوزد

Sometimes the heart burns with the love of the beautiful, sometimes the liver,
 Love every second burns me with a fresh scar ;
 Like the moth I have my affair with a candle lamp,
 That if I go further, my wing and feather burn.

Humāyūn improving on the last hemistich put it
 as follows :

میروم پیش اگر بال و پرم میسوزد

¹ Both were notable poets of Persian language and received favours from Humāyūn. The latter having entered into his service at Cābul accompanied him to India, and remained here till his death which occurred in 956 A. H. For a fuller account of his life and verses refer Badā'ūnī, Vol. I, pp. 477—480.

² Bā Yazīd, Tārīkh 1 Humāyūn, I. O. MSS. No. 223, fol. 12b.

On another occasion he improved on Jāhī Yatmi-yān of Bukhārā, who had entered his service at Cabul. The former had composed a satire on Muhammad Khān Shāpūr and was asked by Humāyūn to read it before the assembly in which Muhammad Khān also was present. When the poet recited the following verses:

شاعر شاه همایونم و خاکِ در که
 میزند کوکبهٔ شاعریم طعنه ده مه
 وای آنکس که بخیلِ شعرا بستیزد
 هر که باما بستیزد ببلا بستیزد

I am the poet of the King Humāyūn, and am the dust of his court,
 The star of the banner of my poetry taunts
 the moon;
 Alas for him who picks a quarrel with the band of poets,
 Whoever quarrels with us quarrels with calamity.

Humāyūn at once remarked :

چرا همچنین نمیگوئی "هر که باما بستیزد بخدا بستیزد"

Why dost thou not say so, "whoever quarrels with us quarrels with God"?

² Ibid.

He has been often referred to by Jauhar and Mīrzā 'Alā'uddaula Qazwīnī as reading the Qur'ān and also quoting from memory several verses from same on various occasions.
 His know- ledge of Ara- bic. Once on gaining victory over the Afghāns he recited the verse :

أَلْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ الَّذِي أَحْيَانَا¹

Praise be to Him Who brought us to life.

On another occasion he quoted from the Traditions as follows :

مَنْ حَفَرَ بَيْراً لِأَخِيهِ فَقَدْ وَقَعَ فِيهِ²

He who dug a pit for his brother, verily himself fell into it.

Some more instances are to be found in the works of contemporary authors like Bā-Yazīd and Jauhar.
 They show to a certain extent his knowledge in Arabic as well as his taste for religious literature.

From his very childhood he evinced a taste for Mathematics, History, Geography, and Astronomy,

His taste for Mathematics, History, Geo- graphy, and Astronomy. and took regular lessons on these branches of Science from Shaikh
 Abul Qāsim Astrābādī, and Maulānā
 Ilyās :

And in this very year the royal mandate in the name of Shaikh Abul Qāsim Astrābādī who knew the science of Mathematics well, had been issued. And His Majesty had resolved to become his pupil and take lessons from him, and at last His Majesty according to his resolution, acted. And the abovenamed scientist, having entered into His Majesty's service in the link of soldiers, was installed in a good ' jāgīr ' in India.

Abul Fazl and Farishta write thus :

² در اقسام علوم ریاضی آنحضرت را پایه بلند بود و همواره به ارباب حکمت صحبت میداشتند و ممتازان علم ریاضی در پایه سریر والا کامیاب سعادت بودند

¹ Bā Yazīd, Tārīkh i Humāyūn, I. O. MSS., 223, fol. 24b

² Akbar Nāma, Vol. I, p. 368.

And in the branches of Mathematics His Majesty ranked high and he always associated with scientists and those distinguished in Mathematics had the boon of attending at the foot of the sublime throne.

۱ در علم ریاضی علم مهارت می افراشت مدار صحبتش
با علما و فضلا بود و همه وقت در مجلس او مسایل علمی
مذکور میشد -

And in the science of Mathematics he lifted up the banner of skill. His social intercourse was based with the learned and the accomplished ; and at all times in his assembly scientific problems were discussed.

In history he appears to have been conversant with the Muslim periods of different countries specially India, Central Asia, and Arabia. Once he related a historical anecdote of Mahmūd of Ghazni's army to serve as a lesson to his own men purporting that honesty is the key to success.²

Also, he transcribed in his own handwriting his father's autobiography 'Wāqī'āt i Bāburī' from the beginning to the end. This would have

² Cf. the statement :

حضرت پادشاه این حکایت بمردم خود اظهار کردند که نیت نیک اینچنین certainly given him an insight into the social and political relations of the contemporary Central Asian States. He also developed a taste for Geography and had globes constructed for his use :

پس کره خاک و آب انتظام و تقسیم ربع مسکون
به اقالیم سبعة وقوع یافته بود

So the globes of the earth and the water had been set up, and the divisions of the habitable quarter into seven regions accomplished.

His tutors in Astronomy were Mullā Nūruddīn, and Maulānā Ilyās. The keen interest which he took in this branch of science is significant as compared with his father's as well as with that of his successors in India. Bābur and pre-Bābur Mughals, (with the exception of 'Ulūgh Bēg') down to his own time, apparently had little faith or

² Son of Shāh Rukh and grandson of Timūr, had been appointed as governor of Māwarā un Nahr during his father's lifetime. He was a devoted student of Astronomy, Mathematics, and Philosophy, and a patron of those interested in scientific subjects. During his governorship he got built at Samarqand an Observatory which was called after his name. He also marked the position of stars and recorded his observations in a separate volume known as 'Zīj i- 'Ulūgh Beg' (or 'Ulūgh Beg's Almanac). Daulat Shāh has given a glorious account of 'Ulūgh Bēg's scientific knowledge in things astrological. He got built a 'Khargāh' (a tent) which was divided into twelve halls of audience, each of which was named after one of the twelve constellations of stars. The furniture and paintings of these halls, as also the dresses of the servants, bore emblematic symbol of the planets :

۱ و از جمله مخترعات شریفه آنحضرت خرگاه بود
که بعدن بروج سپهر مشتمل بر دوازده قسمت بود
هر برج مشتمل بر پنجرها که انوار کواکب دولت از
نقبهای آن تابان بود و خرگاه دیگر مانند فلک الافلاک
جمع جوانب این خرگاه را احاطه نموده بود -

And of all the inventions of His Majesty was a tent which was divided, according to the number of the zodiacs of the sky, into twelve divisions. Every zodiac was divided into cages, from the holes of which the rays of the stars of Fortune shone bright. And another tent like the 'falakul aflāk' (or the sky of skies) enveloped the sides of this tent.

activities and his great achievements in the theoretical and applied Astronomy. According to him there has appeared no monarch like 'Ulūgh Bēg, in the whole history of Islām. [vide Tazkiratush Shu'arā—Edited by Prof. Browne—Account of 'Ulūgh Bēg, pp. 361—6]. For a description of a Calendar based on 'Ulūgh Bēg's system, vide Carre de Vaux's article 'Un Calendrier Turque' in Essays presented to Professor E. G. Browne, edited by T. W. Arnold and R. A. Nicholson.

۱ Akbar Nāma, Vol. I, p. 361.

Also, he got ready a carpet which had nine astronomical circles marked on it, each of which was named after a particular star, and assigned to his courtiers according to their ranks :

And of the inventions of his Majesty was a pleasure carpet, and that spherical carpet was divided into the circles of the sky and the globes of the Elements. The first circle

(which was attributed to ' falak i atlas ') was white in colour ; and the second was blue ; and the third in appropriateness with Saturn was black ; and the fourth (which is the resort of Jupiter) was of sandal colour ; and the fifth (which is related to Mars) was of ruby colour ; and the sixth (which is the abode of the Sun) golden ; and the seventh (which is the resting place of Venus) bright green ; and the eighth (which is the place of Mercury) is of lily colour ; and the ninth circle (which is the halt of the Moon) is white. And after the circle of the moon the spheres of the fire and the air were arranged in order. His Majesty for himself adopted the golden circle, and there seated himself on the throne, and every group of people, from among those assigned to the seven planets, was ordered by his Majesty to sit in a circle (which was constructed just opposite to that planet) for instance, the Indian ' Umarā ' were ordered to sit in the circle of Saturn, and the learned in that of Jupiter.

و از شرایف اختراعات آنحضرت پوشیدن لباس
هر روز بود موافق رنگی که منسوب بکوکب روز است
که مربی اوست چنانچه در روز یکشنبه خلعت زر می
پوشیدند که منسوب به نیراعظم است و در روز دوشنبه
لباس سبز که منسوب بقمر است و برین قیاس -

And among the excellent inventions of his Majesty was the dress for each day in accordance with the colour attributed to the planet of that day which is its patron, so that on Sunday his Majesty robed himself in yellow which is attributed to the Sun, and on Monday in green which is attributed to the Moon, and so on.

He was also preparing to build an observatory for which necessary apparatus and the site had been provided, but owing to his sudden death, the same could not be accomplished:

Materials ready for an observatory.

و آنحضرت را اراده بستن رصد مصمم بود و بسیار
از آلات رصدی ترتیب داده بودند و چند مکمل رصد
خیال فرموده بودند -

And his Majesty was firmly resolved to build an observatory and had set up in order many of the instruments for same and had fixed in his mind a few sites as well.

All this taste he acquired in Indian atmosphere evidently under the influence of Hindū astrology which came into contact with Persian astrology for the first time under the patronage of a Mughal emperor. Like the Pandits he believed in the efficacy of the stars and their potentiality in producing good or bad results in consequence of which he had regulated all his actions according to the supposed influence of the twelve zodiacs and the seven planets. His keenness for astronomical researches has been further described as follows by the Turkish Admiral who was himself made to work on same, and permitted to leave India subject only to the work being finished:

“The roads are flooded and impassable, remain therefore till the weather improves.

evidence. Meanwhile calculate Solar and Lunar Eclipses, their degree of Latitude, and their exact date in the Calendar. Assist our astrologers in studying the course of the Sun, and instruct us concerning the points of the Equator. When all this is done and the weather should improve before three months are over, thou shalt go hence”. . . All this was said solemnly and decisively, I had no alternative but must submit to my fate. At last I had accomplished the astronomical observations, and about the same time Āgra fell into the hands of the Pādishāh.¹

19. Maulānā Zamīrī Bilgrāmī
20. Khwāja Husain Mervī
21. An unknown poet: author of an epic poem.

A short description of each is given below:

A learned Sūfī and theologian—resident of Pānīpat—was one of Humāyūn's chief poets, and wrote several qasāid in praise of him.
 Shaikh Amānullāh Pānīpatī, His style is comparatively simple and his poetry sweet and full of pathos.
 Some specimens of his composition are as follows:

مدام از حسرت آن لعل میگویم
 دلے دارم صراحی وار پرخون
 تو چون لیلی مقیم خلوت ناز
 منم آواره عالم چو مکنون
 گر از تن جان بصد حسرت بر آید
 ز دل مهرت نکخواهد رفت بیرون

 Thou like Lailā resideth in the seclusion of daintiness,

¹ 'Alī Qulī Wālih Dāghistānī, Riyāz ush Shu'arā, B.M. MSS. Add. 16, 729, fol. 44b.

I roam the world like Majnūn ;
 Though the soul leaves the body with a hundredfold remorse,
 From my heart thy love will not depart ;
 Amānī is happy in the assembly of pleasure,
 In the reign of the king of the world,
 Humāyūn.

On Mirzā Hindāl's death, which occurred in a night attack led by Kamrān's troops against Humāyūn's camp which was situated near Surkhāb, Amānī wrote the following chronogram, and presented it to his Majesty :

شاه هندال سر و گلشن ناز^۱
 چوں ازیں بوستان مکن رفت
 گفت تاریخ قمری نالان
 سرور از بوستان دولت رفت

Shāh Hindāl, the cypress of the garden of daintiness,
 When he went away from this garden of toil;
 The lamenting dove uttered the date,
 'A cypress went away from the royal garden.'

Besides this, he composed other chronograms as well, and was chiefly noted in his day for his skill in same. He has been mentioned in this connection by Bā Yazid who styles him as Amānī, Manīja and quotes one of his most beautiful chronograms which ^۱ Badāūnī, Vol. I, p. 454.

he had composed on the death of Sultān Chaghtā'i, a young Mughal chief who was a favourite of Humāyūn:

سلطان چغتے بود گل گلشن خوبی
 ناگه اجلش سوي جهان راه نمون شد
 در موسم گل عزم سفر کرد ازیں باغ
 دل غمچه صفت در غم او غرقه بخون شد
 تاریخ وے از بلبل ماتم زده جستم
 در ناله شد و گفت گل از باغ بیرون شد

Sultān Chaghtā'i was the flower of the garden of excellence,
 All of a sudden Death led him on the way to Paradise ;
 In the season of flowers he resolved to go from this garden,
 The heart like the bud drowned in blood in his grief :
 The date of his departure I sought from the grief-stricken nightingale,
 It went into lamentation and said, ' a flower went out of the garden.'

He was one of the greatest scholars of Humāyūn's reign, and was the son of the famous poet Shaikh
 Shaikh Jamālī Kambūh of Sultān Sikandar Gadā'i Deh- Lodi's court. He spent much of his early life in acquiring knowledge and in lecturing to students of moral philosophy and logic in Gujarāt. In the year of Humāyūn's death, he repaired to the court of Akbar at the invitation of Bairām Khān, and was raised through the latter's special favour to the high rank of 'sadārat.'¹ This installation of the Shaikh was chiefly due to his past loyal services to Bairām Khān during his stay in Gujarāt where he had gone on a special mission in the reign of Humāyūn. His alliance with Bairām Khān which gave him ample shelter and scope for showing favours to his own followers and disciples by appointing them to responsible posts, led him subsequently to interfere with the politics of the State, and he became a zealous member of a political party against Akbar. Abul Fazl as a loyal supporter of Akbar's interests condemns the Shaikh as a mischief-maker and a rebel.² His power and influence came to an end with the fall of Bairām Khān. As a scholar he still remained prominent. So great was the fame of his learning that scholars from Māwarā un Nahr, 'Irāq, and Khurāsān, used to come to India for an interview with him.¹ He is the first notable example in the reign of Humāyūn to combine the knowledge of Arabic and Persian with that of Hindi. In Persian he wrote chiefly 'ghazal' of which a specimen is given below :

گهرے جان منزل غم شد گهرے دل
 غمت را میبرم منزل بمنزل
 مشو غافل ز حال درد مندی
 کہ از حال تو یکدم نیست غافل
 دل دیوانه در زلف تو بستم گرفتارم بان مشکین سلاسل

 stricken,
 For he forgets not thee for a moment;

I hope so much that my penitence,
May serve before thee as an excuse for my sin.

One instance of his qit'a writing is to be found in the following chronogram which he composed on the death of Mirzā Kāmran at Mecca :

اشه کامران خسرو نامدار
که در سلطنت سربکیوان رساند
مجاور شد اندر حرم چار سال
بکلی دل از قید عالم رهاوند
ز بعد وقوف حج چار میں
باحرام حج جان بجایان فشانند
چو در خواب ویسی در آمد شبی
عنایت نمود و سوز خویش خوانند
بگفت ار بپرسندت از فوت ما
بگو - شاه مرحوم در کعبه ماند

The king Kāmran, the renowned monarch,
Who through rule...raised his head to Saturn;
Became a sojourner in the harem for four years,
Freed his heart completely from the prison
of this world;
After the realization of the fourth haj,
In the ihrām of haj entrusted his soul to the Beloved;

When one night he appeared in Waisī's dream,
 He showed kindness and called him near ;
 Then said, " if they ask thee about my decease, Say, the blessed king remained in Ka'ba."

His poetry, as seen from the above, is simple and melodious, and was but slightly affected by the current poetic tendencies at the court.

Like Shaikh Gadā'i he too was a Hindi-Persian poet, and a scholar of varied accomplishments. On account of constant reading and writing his sight became weak. Badāūnī interviewed him at Qannauj in 977 A.H., when the Shaikh on account of his old age had confined himself to his native place. His chief works are the following :

1. A commentary on *Nuzhat ul Arwāh*¹ which Badāūnī praises as authentic.
2. Sanābil—a treatise on the technical terms of Sūfism.

In his last days he was much devoted to Sūfism, and wrote several works on that subject. He also composed Hindi verses and sang them in Hindi tune. In Persian composition he paid more attention to 'ghazal' and wrote elegant verses in same. The chief feature of his poetry, as is commonly observed in contemporary writers, is the frequent use of figures of speech with an attempt to create niceties in them. Once he wrote a 'ghazal' with a flexible turn of phrase and fancy in praise of his dear friend named Rāja.

The opening line is worth noticing :

اے کردہ خیال توبہ تخت دل ما جا
هرگز نبود در دل ما غیر ترا جا

O thou, whose thought has made its seat on the throne of my heart,
Never in my heart is there place for other than thee.

Another beautiful verse quoted by Badāuni is as follows :

مرر بجنگ چو اول بصلح آمد
دمی بلطف نشین تا ز خویش برخیزم

A poet of Humāyūn's court—chiefly known for his lyric poetry and enigma-writing both in Hindi and Persian. Two of his 'ghazals,' of which the opening lines are as follows, are specially noteworthy as serving to illustrate the tendency of average poets towards introducing original and creative ideas with flexible shifts :

Maulānā Jalālī Hindī.

[Note the play on the Hindi word Rāja (राजा) and its ingenious fusion into the Persian compound (توراجا) which may equally be read as (توراجا) making it a Persian-Hindi compound with a welcome shift in meaning.

زاهد ز جام بادۀ لعل تو مست شد

He flourished in India under Bābur and Humāyūn, and was among the literati of their courts. He was a student of natural science in which he seemed to take great interest. His work entitled 'Jawāhir nāma i Humāyūnī'³ which he dedicated jointly to the father and the son⁴ is a dissertation on the ¹ A charmed stone said to be found in the head of serpents and is reputed as an antidote for all kinds of poison.

It was undertaken in the reign of Bābur some-time after his conquest of Hindūstān,¹ and finished under the patronage of Humāyūn and presented to him.

He was a learned scholar of Arabic and Persian. He came to Āgra from Maulānā Nādirī Samarqandī. Samarqand and was given a place among the elite of the court. Badāūnī's remark about his scholarship is as follows :

مولانا نادري سمرقندي.....از نوا در روزگار و فاضل
و جامع کامل بود -

Maulānā Nādirī Samarqandī was among the rarities of the age, and was a highly learned and accomplished scholar.

As a poet of Persian language he built up a reputation and wrote all kinds of poetry including 'ghazal' rubā'ī and 'qasīda.' A specimen of each is given below :

Ghazal :

۱ چه خرام است قد یار را
بنده شوم آن قد و رفتار را

I would become a slave to that form and gait ;
The beloved did not look on us with pity,
Perhaps he cherished a regard for the rivals ;

His composition was not without subtleties which had been largely introduced in India under the patronage of the Mughal court. The following verse which he composed in praise of one Nizām, with whom he is said to have been in love, is illustrative of the popular taste and the atmospheric tendencies in the art of composition :

من دل شکسته گویم صفت نظام نامی¹
که نداشت بیوصالش دل ناتوان نظامی

I the broken-hearted utter the praise of the one named Nizām,
For my weak heart did not keep order (nizām)

One of his 'qasā'id,' in which he delineated on Humāyūn's taste for Mathematics and his prepossessions for science, is as follows. It is as well illustrative of the general style and the standard obtained in the art of 'qasīda' writing :

He died in 966 A. H., and the following chronogram was written by Mr. Amāni Kāblī:

He was appointed by Humāyūn as tutor to the young prince Akbar at Cābul, after Mullā Pir Muhammad.¹ On Humāyūn's second entry into Hindūstān he was invited by the latter to come to Āgra, and on his arrival in 963 A.H., just after Humāyūn's death, was received by Akbar with marks of greatest favour and kindness.² His father Qāzī Yahyā was well-read in history and enjoyed the fame of a historian in his lifetime. He is said to have known by heart the various Muslim dynasties that ruled in Central Asia, Turkey, and Hindūstān. Hairatī, a poet of Trans-Caspian Province, eulogises his wonderful memory and historical insight in the following complimentary verse :

۴ قصه تاریخ ازو باید شنید
 کس درین تاریخ مثل او ندید

⁴ Badā'ūnī, Vol. III, p. 97.

The tale of history ought to be heard from him,

None in the present day has seen any one like him.

Mir 'Abdul Latif himself, like his father, was deeply interested in history, and it was probably due to his command of the subject that he received his appointment as tutor to the young prince. It is noteworthy that his younger brother Mir 'Alā'ud-daula Qazwīnī, who was trained and brought up under the fostering care of his elder brother, was equally a fine historian, and wrote the famous work 'Nafā'is ul Ma'āsir' from which both Badāūnī and Abul Fazl have derived their material for the literary phase of Humāyūn's reign.

He was a student of Mathematics and Astronomy, and was unrivalled in his day for his knowledge in those two branches of science. He acted as tutor to Humāyūn, and taught him lessons on Astronomy. It was due mostly to the training received under him that Humāyūn subsequently developed a considerable taste for that science. Badāūnī tells us that he was proficient in the subject and thoroughly capable of erecting an Observatory.¹ Once when he happened to visit Ardabil in the latter part of his life, he wrote a letter to Shāh Isma'il II (whom Shāh Tahmāsp had in his lifetime imprisoned in the fort of 'Qahqaha'), saying that from the confluence of stars it transpires that he (Shāh Isma'il II) would succeed to the throne and that his other opponents would soon be vanquished. In that letter he also directed Shāh Isma'il to visit him at Ardabil on his release from the prison so that he might put him under the right stars which would lead to his future glory and uninterrupted retention of power. But the latter, while passing Ardabil in procession, on being released by his party in consequence of the revolution which followed the death of his arch-rival Haidar Mirzā, forgot to see the Maulānā, and having gone some distance subsequently recollected the prediction and suddenly turned back and called at the Maulānā's house. The Maulānā locked the door from inside but the Shāh managed to get in by climbing over the wall. Thereupon the Maulānā covered his face and refused to see him saying that the hour appointed was gone and the opportunity lost, since the planets had just moved from their position. The Shāh then was obliged to leave, and though proclaimed king at Qazwīn, yet strange to say that after a year's successful reign, he met his tragic death in a confectioner's house in 985 A.H. It was surmised that he was poisoned at night when under the intoxication of opium, in consequence of the cruelties which he had inflicted on his house and the court.¹

Humāyūn, the king, is that sun,
 Whose all-embracing bounty fell common to all;
 The structure of his power, when it attained its height,
 The foundation of his life fell from its base;
 Like the world-illuminating sun from its height,
 Down below at the time of evening prayer he fell;
 The world became dark in the eyes of the people,
 On the work of the high and the low confusion
 fell;
 For the date thereof Kāhī wrote,
 Humāyūn, the king, from the terrace fell.

Of all the chronograms composed by other poets,
 this is decidedly the most natural and stands unbeaten in the simplicity of style, accuracy of detail, and beauty of language. Another equally simple and suggestive chronogram which he wrote on Kāmrān's death, which took place at Mecca, is as follows :

کامران آنکه پادشاهی را
کس نبود ست همچو او در خور
شد ز کابل به کعبه و آنجا
جان بحق داد و تن بخاک سپرد
گفت تاریخ او چنین گاهی
پادشاه کامران به کعبه مرد

Kāmrān was such that for the place of king,
There was none so worthy as he;
He went from Cābul to Ka'ba, and there,
Entrusted the soul to the True One, and the body to the earth ;

Kāhī wrote the chronogram thus :
'The king Kāmrān died in Ka'ba.'

Abul Fazl calls him Miyān Kālē and counts him among the foremost poets of Akbar's court. Badāūnī, too, though points out his certain faults as a poet, thinks him unrivalled in his day in the essential features of poetry and in the composition of chronograms. He had also associated for some time with Jāmī at Herāt, and acquired there a competent knowledge of the commentary of the Qur'ān and mysticism. In the company of Kāmrān he had gone to Mecca and performed his pilgrimage. For all this Badāūnī thinks him an atheist and finds him guilty of gross religious and moral offences.¹ It is amusing, however, to note that his composed poems were universally popular and sung even in Badāūnī's time in the assemblies of the Sūfis.² The opening lines of some of his odes are as follows. They are unsurpassed in poetic grace and are to be classed among the best productions :

بِه ناز کشت جهانی بت ستمگر من
 هنوز بر سر ناز است ناز پرور من
 My relentless love has slain a whole world with his daintiness, Still he, the cherisher of my temper, is carrying on his amorous playfulness.
 نه نرگس است عیان بر سر مزار مرا
 سفید شد بر هت چشم انتظار مرا

¹ NOTE.—Badāūnī's displeasure is probably due to the poet's acceptance of Akbar's heresies, for Abul Fazl calls him a disciple of the emperor, and also hints at his free and unorthodox life. Cf.—

از مشرب فزاحی پراگنده چندی گرد او فراهم بودی و با چندین دارستی
 خویش پرده آرائی گیتی خداوند خریشتن را از مریدان بر شمردی —
 [Ā'in i Akbari, Vol. I, p. 244.]

² Cf. the statement :

و این هر دو غزل را صوفی خوب بسته که در عالم شهره یافته در
 مجالس میخوانند و بزم ملوک و اهل سلوک بدان آرایش می یابد —
 [Badāūnī, Vol. I, p. 452.]

³ Ibid. Vol. III, p. 174.

NOTE.—Love is often treated by Persian poets as an ideal and then is referred to in masculine terms, in the same way as Cupid is treated in English poetry.

The following, which is full of romantic similes and metaphors, is in praise of a handsome Yogi youth:

آتشیں رویت ز خاکستر چو نیلوفر شدہ
یا نقاب از آتش رومے تو خاکستر شدہ

Thy fiery face has become like a lotus through the ashes smeared on thy face,
Or the veil through the fire of thy face got burnt into ashes.

In a long 'qasīda'² he dwelt on Humāyūn's taste for Astronomy and the uses of certain instruments like the 'astrolabe,' and 'compass' etc., which Humāyūn had collected for his contemplated observatory.

NOTE — It is still the custom of a Hindū Yogi to go about with his face smeared with dust, or ashes.

It may also be observed that the similes employed here are drawn purely from Indian life and surroundings, and the verse is in every aspect Indian in its conception with the creative genius of a poet playing its part under favourable and encouraging circumstances.

² This is the second notable instance to come across after Nādirī's qasīda where the genius of a poet took a scientific turn and was spent in describing apparatuses instead of the usual praises of the court. This was done evidently to arrest Humāyūn's attention and to commend their poetry to his notice. They knew that to gain his full appreciation of their verses it was necessary to compose them according to the royal taste. This shows the extent of the influence that the individual taste of a Mughal sovereign in India could exercise over the literati of his court, as also his power to direct and mould the popular taste of the country as a whole.

۱ چوں سایه هم‌همیم بهر سو روان شوی

 O, Kāhī, thou art the nightingale which adorns the garden of Cābul,
 Thou art not a crow and a kite to go to Hindūstān.

Soon after his arrival in India, there was a marked change in his tone which was gradually softened into the praises for the court and its literati.

He ranked among the foremost poets of Badakhshān, and entered Humāyūn's service when the latter conquered that province. In commemoration of this victory he composed the following chronogram and presented it to the emperor :

M a u l ā n ā Junābī.

1 Ibid., p. 173.

Thou art the king of kings of the age,
Thy work ever ended in victory and triumph ;
Thou didst seize Badakhshān, and the date was found in,
“ Muhammad Humāyūn is the king of land and sea.”

نی گویم خط تو سبزہ و دیکان خد تو گل
شود ظاہر قد تو فتنۂ دوران دم جولان

² Ibid., p. 469.

Thy form shall prove to be 'the turmoil of the age' when thou dost move.

The tendency to create subtleties in the use of figures of speech and exhaust skill at the artful devices, which is a striking feature of the later Mughal age, is also visible in his writings. In a 'masnawī' which he composed in eulogy of his master he made use of all such subtleties to the discomfiture of his contemporaries. From its very first line quoted below, the drift and character of the whole poem can be gauged :

شهنشاه دین پادشاه زمان¹
ز بخت همایون شده کامران

¹ Ibid.

Note the artistic use of the word 'humāyūn' with 'kāmran' in their both concrete and adjectival senses. This is a typical example of the usual attempts at the Indian courts to exhaust two or more figures of speech in one phrase. The prominent figures in the above are ابهام and مراعات النظم [Equivocation and Homogeneity.] The great incentive to this sort of production is to be found in the applausive support of the Mughal kings who encouraged its growth in India as a piece of literary skill. But it must not be understood that this hobby was exclusively Indian. It was in fact Persian, but developed in India under more favourable circumstances. Cf. a similar instance of play on the word 'mahmūd' (name of Sultān Mahmūd Ghaznawī) at the Persian court of Shāh 'Abbās—the Great, from Zulālī's masnawī entitled 'Mahmūd wa Ayāz' beginning :

بنام آنکه مصودش ایاز است * غمش بتخانه ناز و نیاز است

Also cf. the finishing line : الهی عاقبت مصود باشد [B.M. MSS., Or. 350] For further illustrations vide supra, p. F. N. 3.

The emperor of religion and the king of the age,

Became victorious through auspicious fortune.

His other poems including 'rubā'iyāt' and 'qasā'id' are to be found in the biographies of Persian poets. Some selections have been given by Badāūnī and Abul Fazl. The following from the latter is reproduced as a clever composition in praise of Akbar, inducing him to bestow on the poet yet another elephant loaded with gold :

تا بفیلاں میل دیدم دلستان خویش را¹
صرف راه فیل کردم نقد جان خویش را
خاک بر سر میکنم چون فیل هر جا میرسم
گر نه بینم بر سر خود فیلبان خویش را
شاه فیل افکن جلال الدین محمد اکبر است
آنکه بخشد فیل زریں شاعران خویش را

Since I noticed the attention of my heartravisher towards elephants,
I spent in the path of the elephants the cash
of my life ;
I throw dust over my head like an elephant
wherever I go,

¹ Ā'in i Akbarī Vol. I, p. 244.

The above poem is a very good example of the Persian figure of speech known as حسن طلب, wherein the channels of thought and metaphor are suggested purely from the luxuries of an Indian court.

Some of his 'qasā'id' are most remarkable, and are composed in close imitation of those of the leading Persian poets like Salmān, Zahr, Anwārī, and Khāqānī. A few, of which the opening lines are quoted below, are specially noteworthy :

He is called 'Dakhanī' because he had devoted himself in his later years entirely to Deccan, and rose to considerable influence and fortune there. He originally belonged to 'Irāq wherefrom he came to Āgra and stayed there for some time in the beginning. Since he was an orthodox Shī'a and a zealous advocate of his religion, he often discussed with the Sunnī court religious questions which eventually led to a friction between himself and his Sunnī associates. He called himself a relation of Shāh Tahmāsp, and might be that he was purposely sent to Humāyūn's court by the Shāh to convert the emperor into Shī'a. From Āgra he went to his elder brother Shāh Ja'far in Deccan and took service under Burhān Nizām Shāh I, ruler of Ahmadnagar, who soon raised him to the rank of Deputy (Vakīl). He is an epoch-making personage and opens a new chapter in the history of the Deccan by introducing the Shi'a faith in that country and converting the Shāh into a zealous Shi'a. Badāūnī relates the incident which led to the conversion of the Shāh as follows :

و نظام شاه بکری را که بیماری مزمن لاعلاج داشت

 معنی را.....حمل بر کرامات شاه جعفر نموده باغواي

NOTE. A doubt is expressed by Professor Browne, in his recent work 'Persian Literature in Modern Times, A.D. 1500—1924.' p. 169, fn. 3, as to the correctness of the epithet 'Bahrī' with which the Nizām Shāhs of Ahmadnagar were known. Cf.—

"I doubt if 'Bahrī' is a correct reading: it should perhaps be 'Burhān,' the proper name of the second of the Nizām Shāhs of Ahmadnagar who reigned, etc."

As to its correctness as a title or surname of the Nizām Shāhs of Ahmadnagar, there is not the least doubt. The historian Farishtā who, on his arrival in India, had at first settled at Ahmadnagar, due to his father's appointment as tutor to Murtuza Nizām Shāh, says that Nizām Mulk I, (whose real name, on his conversion to Islām, had been changed from Malik Nā'ib to Malik Hasan) was for a time called 'Bahar lū' after the name of his Brahman father

And to Nizām Shāh Bahri, who had a chronic and incurable disease, through Shāh Ja'far's recitation of charm, relief appeared. And having attributed this to Shāh Ja'far's supernatural powers, the king, through his instigation, renounced the Sunnī faith which he had on the manner of Mahdiwī sect, and became a zealous bigot.

He died in 952 A.H., and the date was found in the ingenious phrase و او تابع اعل بيت برده and he was the follower of the house of 'Alī. He was an excellent poet, and is the author of several poetical works consisting mostly of 'masnawī' and 'qasā'id' in praise of Humāyūn and Nizām Shāh Bahri.

He came to Āgra from Shirāz. and took his role as one of Humāyūn's court poets. He had a Sūfistic turn of mind and lived a simple and unostentatious life. Badāūni testifies to his fame as a poet and his tendency to Sūfism. He possessed a sweet tongue and his poetry

'Bahar.' This appellation was changed by Sultān Muḥammad Shāh into 'Bahrī' with which the dynasty became subsequently known in the Deccan. The Sultān had also entrusted to his care his favourite hawk together with other hunting animals due to the suggestivity of the word 'Bahrī' (a hawk or a falcon). Cf. the statement :

سلطان محمد شاه درادان طغی چون لفظ بهرادر را تعریف کرده

was full of pathos and the pang of spiritual love. He wrote chiefly 'ghazal' on separation from his ideal beloved and in complaint of the latter's inattentions. Some specimens are as follows :

He breathed his last in 940 A.H., at Āgra, and was buried by the side of his late friend Shaikh Zainuddīn whose death had occurred just a few months before him.²

He lived at the Mughal court as personal physician to Bābur and Humāyūn, and also as chief Munshī to the latter. He is the author of several works of diverse utility and nature including poetical, medicinal, and epistolary. In poetry he wrote chiefly 'qasida' on subjects connected with public health and hygiene, under the pen-name 'Yūsufī.' Some of his works are the following :

² This is to be noted that both these poets on their arrival in India were in a very miserable condition. Shaikh Abul Wājid who came from Shīrāz had nothing with him besides one old fur coat on his body, and so did the other. Cf. the statement :

زمانی که هر دو بزرگوار متوجه هند بودند از قلاشی مغرط غیر از کهنه پرستینی
باخود نداشتند

[Ibid., p. 477.] From this extreme poverty they rose to fortune under the Mughal patronage. Shaikh Zainuddīn was appointed as 'Sadr' by Bābur and Abul Wājid occupied a seat among the court poets of Humāyūn.

- I. *Riyāz ul Inshā*¹: a treatise on the properties of simple and compound medicinal herbs and prescriptions, undertaken in 946 A.H., and on finish dedicated to Humāyūn.
- II. *Jāmi'ul Fawa'id*²: a work on general medicine treating of their uses, benefits, and injuries, with certain guiding rules.
- III. Qāsida fī hifz i Sihat: a poem on the main principles of hygiene, dedicated to Bābur in 937 A. H., when he was not keeping good health.
- IV. Badāi'ul Inshā: a treatise on the art of literary composition, giving proper titles and forms of addresses in accordance with the rank and profession of the addressee. It was written in 940 A. H.,³ for the benefit of his own son, Rafi'uddin Husain, as well as other youths in general. It has been lithographed at Lāhore, Delhi, and Lucknow.

² Add. 23, 560, B.M. MSS., foll. 262a—264b.

NOTE.—This is only an extract from the preceding work.

³ The date of its composition is obtained by doubling the total of the numerical value of the letters of its title, as hinted by the author in the following verse:

تکرار تکی چونام ادرا یکبار * شک نیست که رة بری بسال اتمام

[Thus بدایع الانشا = 470, which on being doubled (470 × 2 = 940) gives the date of its composition.]

He was the son of the famous scholar and poet of Bābur's time Khwāja Abul Barakāt (still alive and patronised by Humāyūn). The father and the son both were capable poets and wrote all kinds of poetry including 'ghazal' 'masnawī,' 'rubā'ī,' and 'qasīda.' The father used 'Farāqī' as his pen-name. The following 'qasīda' which he wrote after the manner and style of Salmān Sāwajī is one of his worthiest productions :

تپ غم دارم و درد سر هجران بر سر
 آمده جان بلب و نامده جانان بر سر
 تا گرفت آتش دل در تن من چون فانوس
 دامنم چاک شد و چاک گریبان بر سر

The fever of grief and the headache of separation have I : ov'r head,
 To the lip has come life, and the loved hath not come : ov'r head ;
 Since the fire of the heart caught light in my body like a candle-lamp,
 My skirt was torn, and the rent of the collar appeared : ov'r head.

He combined with the sober poetic vein a considerable amount of humour and also wrote satires, for which he had a pungent gift, on eminent theologians in a graceful and felicitous style. Some of his verses from a pleasantly humorous poem written as a satire upon the Qāzi of Nishāpūr are reproduced below :

خلاف شرع پیمبر نوشت فقه دگر^۱
 که هیچ زان نبود در کتابها مسطور
 غسل حرام نوشت و شراب کرد حلال
 که این عصارهٔ تاکست و آن قثی زنبور
 زنی که شکوه شوهر به پیش قاضی برد
 که حظ نفس من از وی نمیرسد بظهور
 جواب داد که گراوقوی ضعیف شد است
 روا بود که در آرد بجای خود مردور

Against the law of the Prophet, he wrote another law,
 Of which naught is found writ in the early books;
 Honey he forbade, and wine he permitted,
 Since one was the grape's juice, the other the bee's vomit;
 To a woman who 'fore the Qāzi of her husband complained,
 That he did not give to her joy complete;
 He replied, "If his strength is so weak,
 'Tis allowed in his place a coolie to seek,"

^۱ Ibid.

Farishta pays him a high tribute of praise and declares that he came to Deccan after Humāyūn's death.¹

His son Khwāja Ayyūb, in his poetical composition sometimes uses 'Ayyūb' and sometimes 'Farāqī' (the pen-name of his father) as his nom de guerre. A specimen of his ode is as follows :

۱۲ شاخ گل که همچو سهری قد کشیده
 بر گرد لب خطی ز زمرد کشیده
 قدت برآمده چو الف مدظله
 دو ابروان فراز الف مد کشیده
 بر حرف دیگران زده قرعه قبول
 بر حرف عاشقان قلم رد کشیده
 از دولت وصال فراقی طمع مبر
 جور و جفای یار چو بیگد کشیده

O branch of the rose, thou art drawn straight like an erect stature, which is inserted both in the Introduction and at the end, and works out into 946 A.H'. The work is called 'Humāyūnī' after the name of the emperor, to whom, as it appears from the Preface, this copy was formally presented. The author also incidentally hints at several works of his prior to this one, and says as a reason for writing this book, that from his very boyhood till his mature age, he was busy in acquiring knowledge under the best teachers of the age, and having studied some rare works like 'Nafā'is ul Funūn fī 'Arā'is ul 'Uyūn,' 'Sittin ul Āsār,' and 'Hadā'iq ul Anwār,' he thought of putting together their contents as well as those of his previous works, in a smaller compilation. The work is therefore a sort of Encyclopedia which is a singular undertaking in that age and stands by itself.

The title page bears the seals of Shāh Jahān, Sulaimān Jāh, Sultān 'Ālam, and Shāh 'Ālam, with several autographs of the librarians and private owners. These, with the inscription of Sulaimān Jāh's seal², suggest that the book remained in the libraries of the kings of Delhī and Oudh. Since the work is of peculiar interest, it would be of some value for a student of literary history to observe the style of its language, and the tone of the author's Preface and his address to the king, together with the subjects discussed, which in those days formed the main basis of learning and considered important from a scholar's standpoint.

In the abovequoted preface of the author several points are of special interest, of which the following deserve notice :

1. The work was the greatest and most important literary undertaking in Humāyūn's reign.
2. The author's idea of writing an Encyclopædia in that age, with the object of presenting it to a Mughal emperor in India, and not to any other Eastern monarch of a neighbouring country, is significant, and throws ample light on the literary taste of, and patronage shown by, the Mughal rulers.
3. The then prevailing system of writing chapters and headings in red ink, with the number of page indicated on the top of each in black ink, is somewhat peculiar, though at the same time very simple (vide facs. of fol. 3b).

4. The exceptional command and patience of a copyist to write out such a voluminous work in absolutely one hand and one style from the beginning to the end, with distinctive accuracy, elegance, and neatness, is an important feature of the time, and shows the height of excellence achieved in the art of calligraphy. Also, their mode of crossing and correcting mistakes by enclosing the rejected portion with ۞ inserted in the beginning, and ۞ at the end, is indicated in facs. fol. 1b.
5. The subjects discussed in the work, constituted علوم متداوله (current sciences), which were commonly taught in the educational institutions in those days, and formed the main basis of learning.
6. Arabic characters were generally employed in writing books of Persian language, and specially in literary and scientific books. Even the poetical works of standard poets were all written in naskh (Arabic characters); while Persian characters (nasta'liq) were more commonly used in works of less important character, and light literature such as State documents, foreign correspondence, firmāns, and official and private letters.

The reason of composition is given by the author in the following words :

و در همه حالات و جمیع اوقات بخدمات حضور
قیام مینموده پس بکاطر این خطور کرد که تیمناً و تبرکاً حالات و معاملات را بطریق یادداشت بقدر
فراست خود..... تذکره نماید

And in all circumstances and at all times he had stayed in the service of his Majesty ; so it occurred to his mind that he should record, as a memorandum and a boon and a blessing, the events and anecdotes, according to his own intellectual capacity.

He entered Humāyūn's service as an ewer-bearer at a very young age, and attended him faithfully during his reverses and flight from Hindūstān. Though not a very learned man, he is the author of a very important work which is of special historical value as being a faithful and unbroken record of Humāyūn's private life during his exile. It was undertaken long after Humāyūn's death in the year 995 A.H.²

² Tazkirat ul Wāqī'āt, B.M. MSS. Add. 16, 711, fol. 2b. A copy of this work (inferior to the B.M. Codex) is also in the I.O. Library.

For a critical estimate of Jauhar see Raverty's article in the J. R. A. S.

A summary of its contents is given below :

- I. Humāyūn's fight with Sultān Bahādur Gujārātī, and the conquest of Gujārāt.
- II. His contests with Shēr Shāh, and temporary victory and occupation of Bengāl.
- III. Subsequent attack by Shēr Shāh and Humāyūn's defeat; his pluck while crossing the river; help given by a water-carrier who was afterwards made to sit on the royal throne at Āgra for half a day (du s̄ā'at),¹ in reward for his signal service.

¹ A "s̄ā'at" ساعت should not be understood in the strict sense of an hour. The day was then divided, as it is now, into four 's̄ā'at' or 'ghari' (also known as 'pās' or 'pahr.') Gulbadan Begam calls these divisions by the last name. Cf.—

تا سه پهر شب مجلس بود بعد از سه پهر حضرت آشپز فرمودند

[Humāyūn Nāma, p. 37.]

These divisions of time were essentially Indian and had puzzled Bābur greatly. The above statement that the day was divided into four 's̄ā'at' is supported by Farishta also, who, in this instance, interprets 'du sa'at' into half a day. Cf.—

وعدة فرمود که پادشاهی نیمروز را بعد از رسیدن بآگره بتو
ارزانی دارم چنانچه همان قسم بعمل آید

[Farishta, Vol. I, p. 407.]

It may however be noted that Gulbadan Begam differs from both Jauhar and Farishta, and declares that the menial sat on the throne for two days. Cf.—

تا دو روز بنی غلام پادشاهی دادند

[Humāyūn Nāma, p. 44].

's̄ā'at' also means a watch.

- IV. Humāyūn's further reverses due to the hostile attitude of his brothers.
- V. His flight to Persia ; reception by Shāh Tahmāsp ; the latter's evil designs against Humāyūn, and their aversion through the timely intervention of Bahrām Mirzā's sister ; help given to Humāyūn by the Shāh ; conquest of Cābul ; recruitment of soldiers for the attack on Hindūstān ; death of Shēr Shāh ; Humāyūn's entry into Āgra.
- VI. His last days and death by an accidental fall from the staircase of his palace at Delhī.

The style is generally simple and unadorned though at places he has, in conformity with the practice of the times, indulged into rhetorical expressions, probably to make a display of his knowledge, and inserted various quotations from the Qur'ān and the works of Persian poets.

Like Jauhar, he too was in the retinue of Humāyūn during the latter's flight from Hindūstān, and wrote a work entitled 'Tārīkh i Bā Yazīd. Humāyūn' at the request of Akbar. The author's own version as to this undertaking is as follows :

چوں جم جاہ جلال الدین محمد اکبر پادشاہ
فرمودند از بندہاے درگاہ ہریک را کہ سلیقہ تاریخ

Since Jalāluddīn Muhammad Akbar Pādishāh of Jamshīd's dignity said, "Every one from among the servants of the court who possess an aptitude for history may write it, nay, from the reign of Humāyūn Pādishāh, if any one has any events in his recollection, they (he) may insert them therein (history), and conclude it in my Majesty's name." And this royal mandate was conveyed to humble Bā Yazīd by Nawāb Shaikh ul Mashā'ikh Shaikh Abul Fazl, son of Shaikh Mubārak.

The work is almost similar to Jauhar's in diction and style and is full of many interesting incidents of Humāyūn's and Akbar's private lives. It was undertaken at Lāhore in the year 999 A.H., when the author was feeling the infirmity of old age.¹ A most important piece of information contained in the work is the list of scholars and sundry notable officers who accompanied Humāyūn from

و چون ایام جوانی گذشته و ایام پیری درآمده بود و حافظه را قوت

چندانی نمانده... إلخ [Ibid.]

Persia, Cābul, and other territories, on his way back to Hindūstān.¹

His real name was Shaikh Nizām. He entered Humāyūn's service on his second entry into Hindūstān.

He is said to be an excellent poet of Humāyūn's court, and wrote several 'masnawīs' and 'qasā'id' of which some he dedicated to the emperor. He died at an advanced age in 1003 A.H., and the chronogram of his death was found by one Nawāb Mubārak Khān of Delhi in the words 'آه آه نizam' (āh āh Nizām). It is a happy coincidence that a poet of the same name also lived at the court of Shāh Tahmāsp Safawī, and was reckoned among the leading poets of his day. Besides his numerous 'qasā'id' in praise of the Shāh, a custom which very curiously prevailed both in India and Persia, and was a common feature of the two courts, he wrote several 'masnawīs' of which the following were well-known :

- (i) Wāmiq wa 'azrā.
- (ii) Nāz wa Niyāz.
- (iii) Afsāna i Bahār wa Khizān.
- (iv) Lailā wa Majnūn (also called "sar guzasht i Majnūn").
- (v) Jannat ul Akhyār.
- (vi) Sikandar Nāma.

He also left two 'diwāns' entitled 'sahā'if i 'amal' and 'Iqd i la'ālī,' consisting mostly of 'qasā'id' in praise of the Shāh; and 'ghazal' and 'rubā'ī' in praise of his beloved, and on the transitoriness of this world and its vanities. He died in Persia thirty years before his namesake in India.

He was a descendant of Shaikh Ruknuddīn 'Alā'uddaula Samnānī, and a pupil of Maulānā 'Isām-uddīn in logic and philosophy, and of the famous Traditionalist Shaikh Ibn i Khwāja Husain Mervī. Hajar II, in traditions and theology.

As a poet of Persian language he compiled a 'diwān,' and is mentioned by Abul Fazl and Badāūnī (both of whom derived their material from Nafā'is ul Ma-'āsir) as one of the poets of Akbar's reign. Bā Yazīd, however, mentions the Khwāja under Humāyūn, as one of his constant associates.¹ Some specimens of his poetry, which is full of subtleties peculiar to India, are as follows :

۱۲۷۱ از مژه بے تو آب رفته
وز دیده خیال و خواب رفته

O thou, without thee, from my eye-lash the water flowed,
And from the eye, the thought and the sleep departed.

by Akbar. It remained unfinished when he left India in 980 A.H., for Cābul, where he died soon after. His poetic powers and erudition may well be judged by the fact that Faizī was his pupil and was brought up and trained by him. When the Khwāja took leave for Cābul, Faizī found the date of this event in the words ‘دام ظله’ which are used for no less respectable a person than one’s father or guardian. One of his marvellous compositions is a ‘qasīda’ which he wrote and presented to Akbar on the occasion of Jahāngīr’s birth in 977 A.H. It was considered as a masterpiece of surpassing skill ever designed by any one before him. The author himself seemed proud of its production, and challenged his colleagues (in the 13th verse) saying that no one from among the court poets could bring as a present anything better than that. It is so arranged throughout that the first hemistich of every line gives the year of Akbar’s accession to the throne, while the second does that of Jahāngīr’s birth. This shows the progress made in the art of chronogram so ardently taken up under the Mughal patronage :

The work is different from Khwāndāmīr's Humāyūn Nāma, already noticed under Bābur. It was not written during Humāyūn's lifetime, but after his death by an unknown poet of his or his successor's court. This is evident from the fact that Humāyūn is nowhere mentioned by name but by his posthumous title 'jannat āshyanī' while Akbar is mentioned as the ruling monarch. It is written after the style and metre of Firdausī's Shāh Nāma commencing with the verse :

شیمے خاطر م بود فارغ ز خواب¹
 دل از نور اشراق شد کامیاب

Eight folios in the beginning and many at the end after 65b are missing. The author has attempted to follow Firdausī closely and to identify himself with him in the subject-matter. This is

The author has at places imitated Firdausi so closely in loftiness of expression, beauty of language and daintiness of similes that it is sometimes hard to distinguish which is which. He must be a great poet indeed from among the very best poets of Humāyūn's or Akbar's reign.¹ Some of his lines by way of sample are quoted below from the B. M. codex :—

Lines on Humāyūn's communication and fight with Sultān Bahādur Gujarāti :—

¹ Shibli on the alleged authority of Badāūnī states that Nazīrī, the famous lyric poet of Akbar's reign, had undertaken to write an epic poem entitled "Shāh Nāma i Humāyūnī," which remained unfinished, at the suggestion of Bairām Khān. [Shi'r-ul-'Ajam, Vol. III, p. 4.]

I was unable to discover the reference in Badāūnī, under both Nazīrī and Bairām Khān. Shibli has evidently confused Nazīrī, with Manzari, a less important poet, who, according to Badāūnī had undertaken the task. [Vide Vol. III, pp. 340-41] Badāūnī has also quoted one verse as sample which I could not find in the B. M. codex.

CHAPTER IV

The greater part of Humāyūn's reign was unsettled and chequered with misfortunes and exiles. The extent of progress made by Urdū in his reign is hardly ascertainable due to the scantiness of material, but there could be no doubt that the same was progressing steadily in the whole of Upper Hindūstān, including the Punjab and the Gujarāt. The appearance of Hindī-Persian poets in increasing numbers is a good testimony of the gradual hold of Hindī over Persian, and their mutual growth and free play with each other. An evidence of same is to be found in the talk of a parrot which was captured by Humāyūn in his fight with Sultān Bahādur Gujarātī. When Humāyūn led an attack on Mālwa in 942 A.H., Sultān Bahādur, better known as Bahādur Shāh, at the advice of his faithless General Rūmī Khān, unwisely took refuge in the fort outside the city, instead of meeting his enemy face to face in battle. The siege lasted for several weeks till at last Humāyūn's officers, who had secretly won over Rūmī Khān to their side, began to intercept the supplies of food sent to Bahādur Shāh which weakened the position of the besieged a great deal. In addition to this treachery, Rūmī Khān one night caused his men to set fire to the royal magazine, and this was followed by an attack from Humāyūn's troops who eventually entered the fort unmolested. Thus Bahādur Shāh was overcome and fled to Gujarāt for his life. He had a favourite bird—a tūtī which repeated what it heard like a human being. When it was brought to Humāyūn in the open court, Rūmī Khān also was invited by the king to be present. On Rūmī Khān's entering the court, Humāyūn courteously said, "خوش بیاید رومی خان" (welcome Rūmī Khān). The bird hearing his name screamed aloud "پہت پاپی رومی خان نمکھرام پہت پاپی نمکھرام"² (Tut Rūmī Khān, sinner, untrue to salt, tut sinner, untrue to salt). All amazed, and Humāyūn said :—

چکنم رومی خان حیف کہ جانور است سزاوار
عقوبت نیست إلا زبانش از دہانش بر می کندم -

What can I do Rūmī Khān, alas, it is a bird, otherwise I would have pulled its tongue from its mouth.

The speech of the bird is a curious combination of Hindī, Persian and Arabic words, systematically arranged and put in a sentence.³ This is perhaps the best example of Urdū that could be traced in the reign of Humāyūn, and serves to show how people were accustomed to talk in their homes and on private occasions. Of the many poets cited under Humāyūn, Badāūnī has referred to some who composed both in Hindī and Persian. On the same authority we learn that their hybrid composition had found complete favour with the gentry and on several occasions sung before Humāyūn. Thus the already existing relations between Hindī and Persian had drawn closer and more friendly under Humāyūn than under Bābur. Both the Hindūs and the Muslims now appear to have publicly given up their prejudices not only in the cultivation but also in the use of each other's literature. The Muslims though from the very beginning showed no such bias in the acquisition of Hindī language, yet they had not taken to do it so freely as they did now. The Hindūs too in their turn, owing to their unavoidable social and political relations with the Muslims, were doing the same. The Rājput Princes and the Hindū Rājās, for holding necessary communications with the Muslim conquerors, kept at their courts a special staff well-equipped to deal with the original Persian documents. In certain cases where the papers were of a confidential nature, the Rājās themselves used to attend to them. Similarly the Muslims behaved and kept a competent staff

The Rājās obtaining opportunity came to Shēr Shāh, and in consultation with him wrote letters to him from the tongue of the Umarā of Māldeo in Hindī script, saying, “We through necessity did homage to Māldeo up till now. When the victorious army of Islām will reach near, we, having separated ourselves from Rājā Māldeo, will join your Majesty's forces." And in accordance with these letters they also wrote from the tongue of Shēr Shāh stating "God willing, after our victory and subjection of Māldeo, I will hold you in honour and esteem, and will reinstate you in all your ancestral possessions." Thereafter they made those false letters fall through clever devices into the hands of Māldeo. And Māldeo who always entertained fear and anxiety in his heart against his Zamīndārs and Umarā got terrified on perusing those letters and Kūnhaiyā and other nobles, however much they counselled him, it proved of no avail.

As a result of this harmony and interalliance, Muslim poets of Hindī language on the one hand, and Hindū writers of Persian on the other, sprang up in ever so large numbers under the patronage of the later Mughal emperors.

Growth of Muslim poets of Hindī language and Hindū writers of Persian prose and poetry.

During Humāyūn's absence from India the same feature prevailed in the reign of Shēr Shāh, and the number of such poets as composed both in Hindī and Persian kept multiplying. The Muslim interest in Hindī literature under Shēr Shāh is evidently more marked than before, due perhaps to his own predilections for Hindī. The appearance of a renowned poet of Hindī language, Malik Muhammad Jā'isī, who is described under Shēr Shāh marks a new era in the history of Muslim lore in India. It is a notable departure from the old customary traditions of mixing Hindi with Persian, for his poems were composed in terse Hindi almost to the exclusion of Persian vocabulary.

SHER SHĀH SEATED ON HIS THRONE.

[From an album of Pathān kings.]

CHAPTER V

A portion of the period of Humāyūn's rule is covered by Shēr Shāh who held undisputed sway of Hindūstān for five years during

Shēr Shāh : Humāyūn's exile. His real name was his name and Farīd, and his title ' Shēr Khān ' which parentage. was conferred upon him by Sultān

Muhammad, ruler of Behār, due to the extraordinary valour shown by Farīd in killing a tiger. On his defeating Humāyūn and ascending the throne at Delhī, he changed ' Shēr Khān ' into ' Shēr Shāh . ' His grandfather, Ibrāhīm Sūr, had come down to India from Afghānistān in the reign of Sultān Bahlōl Lōdī, and served under him in various capacities. After Ibrāhīm's death, his son Hasan Sūr took service under Jamāl Khān, an influential noble of Sikandar Lōdī's court, and received as ' jāgīr ' the important ' parganās ' of Sahsrām and Khawāspūr which remained for long a bone of contention between Farīd and his brothers.

In his early youth he had left his home, through domestic unpleasantness, for Jaunpūr, where he busied himself in the pursuit of knowledge, and acquired a taste for history and literature. He studied Arabic grammar up to ' Kāfiya ' and sundry works of Persian poets like Sa'dī and Nizāmī :

His literary attainment and patronage of letters.

فرید بتقریب نامهربانی پدر و خصومت برادران جدا شده ترک نوکری جمال خاں نموده چندگاه در جونیپور به تحصیل علوم و کسب کمالات میگزرانید تا آنکه کتاب کافیه را باحواشی و دیگر مختصرات خواند و از کتب سواد گلستان و بوستان و سکندرنامه و غیر آن نیز استحضار گرفت و پیرامون خوانق و مدارس گشته در صحبت علما و مشایخ کبار آن دیار به تهذیب اخلاق مشغول شد -

Farid due to the unkindness of his father and the enmity of his brothers, having separated from them, and resigned his service under Jamāl Khān, passed some time at Jaunpūr in gathering knowledge and the acquirement of perfections, till the time he read 'Kāfiya' with commentaries and other compendiums. And he also read the Gulistān, Būstān, and Sikandar Nāma and other works besides, and having approached monasteries and schools, he busied himself in the purification of morals in the society of the learned and the great Shaikhs of that locality.

And in the branch of history as well he became conversant.

Like his predecessor, Sultān Sikandar Lōdī, he patronised the students of Arabic and Persian literature, and attached great importance to educational merit in all public services. In his official and private life he had scholars and poets constantly attending him¹ and was fond of listening to their literary discussions and participating in same. Once a Qāzī of his court, who was accompanied by a young student, came to see him. The keen interest evinced by the latter in the youth and the patronage shown to him is described as follows :

جواني باقاضي همراه - شیرشاه از قاضي پرسید
که این همراهی شما میدانم که خویشی شما داشته
باشد اما هیچ فضیلت هم دارن قاضي گفت طالبعلم
است کافیه میخواند شیرشاه چون کافیه را با حواشی

A youth accompanied the Qāzī. Shēr Shāh asked the Qāzī, "I presume that this comrade of yours bears some relationship with you, but does he possess any merit also"? The Qāzī replied, "The youth is a student, and reads 'Kāfiya.' Shēr Shāh, since he had retained in his recollection the 'Kāfiya' with its correct commentaries, asked that student, "Is 'Umar' 'munsarif' or 'ghair munsarif'?" The student replied, 'ghair munsarif.' Shēr Shāh said, "With what argument?" The student gave an intelligent answer with his arguments based on logical reasoning. Shēr Shāh ordered that 500 'bīgah' of land and 500 rupees cash be given to him. The student said, "I possess one more merit." Shēr Shāh asked, "What is that?" The student replied, "I retain in my memory the Divine book." Shēr Shāh ordered that 500 'bigah' and 500 rupees more be added to his share. Simultaneously with that, he asked the student, "Did you get the means of living and the cash money according to your merits?" The student replied, "Yes, I got them, but I have not yet received the generosity of the king." Shēr Shāh ordered that 500 'bigah' of land and 500 rupees cash more be added.

He had a good taste for poetry and composed verses both in Persian and Hindī under the pen-name 'Farīd.' The following Persian verse of his own composition was his monogram which he got inscribed on his seal.

His taste for Persian and Hindī poetry.

the river while crossing same, Shēr Shāh composed a very opportune quatrain as follows :

خدایا توانا تو نگر توئی
تواناے درویش پرور توئی
فرید حسن را تو شاهی دهی
سپاہ ہمایوں بمانی دهی

O God, Mighty and Rich art Thou,
Thou art the Mighty Supporter of the poor ;
Thou givest royalty to Farid, son of Hasan,
Thou givest the army of Humāyūn to the fish.

In his composition he followed the current Indian style which was on the lines of flowery Persian.

² و شعر فارسی بروش مردم ہندوستان گفتے

And Persian verses he composed after the manner of the people of Hindūstān.

He also composed verses in Hindī and was a patron of Hindī poetry. The chief Hindī and Persian poets of his court were respectively Malik Muhammad Jāi'sī (the author of Padumāwat), and Shaikh 'Abdul Hai, son of Shaikh Jamālī Kambūh.

There is a Persian-Arabic verse of his as follows :

¹ Tazkira i Bāgh i Ma'ānī (bound with Nafāis ul Ma'āsir)
B.M. MSS., Or. 1761, fol. 130a.

² Tarikh i Dā'ūdī, B.M. MSS., Or. 197, fol. 77a.

با ما چه کرد دیدی ملو غلام گیدی
قولیست مصطفی، الا خیر فی العبیدی

With us what did Mullū do ? the slave, the cursed,
The Prophet has said, " There is no good in slaves."

He evinced good taste and fine poetic humour on many occasions. Once on being told that his beard had grown white, he replied that it was true, since he wore the crown towards the evening of his life.

He died while storming the fort of Kālinjar in 952 A.H., through the bursting of an enemy rocket which caused a fire in the magazine. The date of his death was found in the most suggestive phrase "ز آتش مرد" in the following chronogram composed by one of his court poets.

شیرشاه آنکه از مهابت او
شیر و بز آب را بهم میخورد

NOTE.—Shēr Shāh had composed this verse on the occasion when Mullū Khān, ruler of Mālwa playing false, had one night surreptitiously disappeared from Shēr Shāh's camp, although the latter had shown him great favour and taken him into confidence.

Farishta attributes the second hemistich to Shaikh 'Abdul Hai who had composed it offhand to match with Shēr Shāh's first hemistich. [Farishta, Vol. I, p. 425.] The same is corroborated by Nizāmuddīn Ahmad: Tabaqāt i Akbarī, p. 231.]

² Farishta, Vol. I, p. 429.

Shēr Shāh is he through whose terror,

Historians are unanimously agreed that Shēr Shāh was a just, wise, and capable monarch, and his reign was distinguished for peace and tranquillity. Badāūnī congratulates himself on his birth having taken place in the reign of a just monarch like Shēr Shāh¹ in the following words which shower a most glowing tribute of praise that could ever be paid to any Muslim king :

¹ This encomium of Badāūnī is significant since he had no word of praise for his own sovereign, Akbar, by whom he was patronised.

of this 'Muntakhab' took place on the 17th of the month of Rabī'us Sānī in the year 947 A.H.

Farishta holds the same view of Shēr Shāh's just and peaceful administration and says that he performed many deeds of public good in building Cāravānsarās for the Hindūs and the Muslims alike on the main roads from Bengāl to the Indus (a distance of 1500 kōs), and from Āgra to Māndū (a distance of 300 kōs), requisitioning them with plentiful supplies of food and provision, and making these routes perfectly safe for journey :

baked brick. He appointed a 'mu'azzin,' a reader of the Qur'ān, and an Imām, and fixed gratuities for each of them. And in every Sarāi he fixed one gate for cooked food and rations for the Muslims, and another similar gate for the Hindūs. And in his reign such was the public security that travellers in jungle and desert, wherever they reached, went to sleep without apprehension for their property. It is said that if an old woman with a tray full of gold slept at nights in a desert there was no need for a watch at all. Often he devoted himself to public service and duly attended to the affairs of his army and the welfare of his subjects, and persevered in the path of equity and justice.

He is a most important poet of the court of Shēr Shāh. He combined the Sanskrit and Persian scholarship with poetic attainments, and was regarded as a Sūfi. He was patronised by Shēr Shāh whom he eulogised in his memorable Hindi poem, the 'Padumāvati'¹ which was a notable undertaking by a Muslim. It was written in 947 A.H., in terse Hindī language occasionally mixed with Persian and easy Hindī words. The most curious thing was that he adopted Persian characters for his text, an event of epoch-making significance in the history of both Hindī and Persian literatures in India :

“Malik Muhammad is, we believe, the oldest poet of Hindūstān of whom we have any uncontested remains. The preservation of Padumāvati is due mainly to the happy accident of Malik Muhammad’s religious reputation. Although profoundly affected by the teaching of Kabir, and familiarly acquainted with Hindū lore and with the Hindū Yōga philosophy, he was from the first revered as a saint by his Muhammadan co-religionists. He wrote his poem in what was evidently the actual vernacular of his time, tinged slightly with an admixture of a few Persian words and idioms due to his Musalmān predilections. It is also due to his religion that he originally wrote it in the Persian character, and hence discarded all the favourite devices of Pandits who tried to make their language correct by spelling vernacular words in the Sanskrit fashion. He spelled each word rigorously as it was pronounced. His work is hence a valuable witness to the actual condition of the vernacular language of the 16th century.”¹

¹ G. H. Grierson and Mahāmahopādhyāya Sudhā Karan Dvivēdi, Padumāvati, Vol. I, Introduction, Calcutta, 1911.

He was a disciple of two prominent Sūfis, Sayyid Ashraf Jahāngir and Sayyid Muḥi'uddīn,¹ whose praises he sang in his poems calling them as his masters and steersmen. He also poured unqualified praise on Shēr Shāh for his just and peaceful reign, and for his literary patronage. He is one of the three great Muslim poets of Hindi² who flourished in India in the 16th century A.D., and helped towards the formation and growth of modern Urdū the lingua franca of India.

¹ These two in their lifetimes had considerable influence over the people of Upper Hindūstān, and belonged to the Chishtiya Nizāmiya order.

² The other two being Kabīr of the reign of Sultān Sikandar Lōdī (already described under Bābur), and Rahīm of the reign of Akbar (to be discussed hereafter).

CHAPTER VI

He met his tragic death at Delhi in 963 A.H., by an accidental fall from the terrace of his library where he often retired in the after-

That evening also according to his wont, having examined his bookshelves, he walked on to the terrace to enjoy fresh air. Just when he was descending the staircase the 'mū'azzin' gave a call to prayers, on hearing which he went down on his knees in holy reverence. When the 'azān' was over, he rose supporting himself on a staff which unfortunately slipped upon the marble, and he fell down headlong several steps. He received great injuries in his head and arm, and was removed to his palace insensible. On the fifth day he expired.¹ Thus ended the life of one of the most humane monarchs of the Mughal dynasty, a lover of science and literature, and a character nobler than any to be found in the long line of the Mughal kings.

¹ Badāūnī and Abul Fazl have probably used the Turkī work 'Mir'āt ul Mamālik' of Sīdī 'Alī Reīs who was then personally present at the court and describes the event with almost the same accuracy of detail as do Badāūnī and Abul Fazl, with the following notable differences:

(i) Sīdī 'Alī Reīs omits to say from what part or section of the castle Humāyūn fell; while Badāūnī and Abul Fazl make it quite clear by stating that the fall occurred from the building known as 'Kitāb Khāna' (library).

The court poets wrote chronograms¹ each trying to excel the other in poetic grace and plain-tiveness. Of the numerous chronograms the best was of Maulānā Qāsim Kāhī quoted by Jauhar and reproduced on p. 55 supra. Elegiac poems were also written poems.

(ii) Sidi Ali Reis makes Humāyūn die on the fourth day of his fall. Cf. the statement :

حکمت‌الہک جمعہ کون اختتام نمازی وقتندہ پادشاہ..... در غنبدہ
ون دار رحمتن جوار رحمة انتقال ایتدیلر - [Mir'āt ul Mamālik, p. 55]

while Abul Fazl on the fifth day; and Badāūnī on the ninth. Cf. the statement :

در تاریخ ہفتم شہر ربیع الاول پادشاہ بر بالائے بام کتابخانہ... بر
آمدند و در حین فرود آمدن... بایے ایشان بلغزید و از چند زینہ
ایہ غلطیدہ بزمین آمدند و در پانزدہم ماہ مذکور این عالم بیونا را
برود کردند -

[Badāūnī, Vol. I, pp. 465-466]

I suspect that پانزدہم is a misprint for یازدہم. If so, the versions of Badāūnī and Abul Fazl tally with Jauhar who, though gives no details, yet declares that the fall took place on the 7th and the death on the 11th.

other monarch of his line. In his display and appreciation of wit he may be compared to his ancestor Timūr; in his love for science to Ulūgh Bēg; and in his poetic insight to Jahāngīr. A few instances of same are quoted below :

And they brought Qarjā Khān with sword hung round his neck. When he reached the torch which was near the Audience Hall,

And Husain Qulī Mirzā, brother of Ahmad Sultān, who had come from Mashad to see his mother and brothers to obtain leave for Mecca, interviewed his Majesty, and presented some books which he possessed. Out of these books his Majesty took some which pleased him and gave back the rest.

(Tārikh-i-Humāyūn, I. O. MSS., 223, fol. 3b.)

Humāyūn ordered that as Qarjā Khān was grey-haired and we had also perjured his blood, the sword should be removed from his neck. After this Husain Quli Sultān, the seal-bearer, recited this verse :

The lamp which is lit by God,
Whoever puffs at it his beard burns.

And since Qarjā Khān had a long beard this verse came opportune. His Majesty enjoyed this wit in the extreme.

Another instance of his ready wit is to be found in the following :

شیخ علی بیگ بهبود چویدار را گفت که مبارکبادی
بحضرت پادشاه رفته بده بهبود مذکور روان شد
نظر حضرت بریں سوار افتاد پرسیدند که کدام سوار
اینکه می آید مردم بقیاس عرض کردند که بهبود چویدار

که انشاءالله بهبود خواهد بود -

Shaikh 'Ali Bēg asked Bihbūd Chūbdār to go and congratulate his Majesty. The aforesaid Bihbūd started off. The eye of his Majesty fell on this rider and he asked, " Who is this rider that cometh " ? People by mere guess replied that he might be ' Bihbūd ' Chūbdār. His Majesty took this to be a good omen and said, " God be pleased, it would be ' bihbūd ' " (i.e., it would turn out good).

1 Tāzkirat ul Wāqī'āt, B.M. MSS., Add. 16,711, fol. 48b.

On one occasion Humāyūn composed a ' qit'a ' in which he very beautifully played on the word چتر (chitaur), and sent it on to Sultān Bahādur Gujarātī :

اے کہ ہستی غنیم شہر چتور
 کانراں را چطور میگیری
 پادشاہی رسید بر سر تو
 تو نشستہ چتور میگیری

O thou who art the enemy of the city of Chitaur,

How (chitaur) wilt thou capture the unbelievers?

A king has reached over thy head,
 Sitting, art thou taking Chitaur ?

Cf., Bahādur Shāh's reply :

من کہ ہستم غنیم شہر چتور * کانراں را بجزر میگیرم
 ہر کہ بکند حمایت چتور * تو بیی کش چطور میگیرم

I, who am the enemy of Chitaur,
 Will capture the infidels by force ;
 Whoever stands in defence of Chitaur,
 Thou may'st see how I capture him also.

It may be observed that Bahādur's reply is only a repetition of Humāyūn's wit, and carries no originality or improvement upon the latter,

He was a monarch of great humanity and possessed of very noble traits of character.¹ He was disposed to spend his time more in literary and peaceful concerns than aggression and military tactics on the battlefield.

His gentlest behaviour towards his brothers² through whose undisguised hostility he suffered

چوں رقعہ رسید و خواندند حضرت شاه عالم پناه در تعجب شدند
و فرمودند که محمد همایون پادشاه چه حلم دارد این مردم در پی
آزار وے بودند درینولا شفاعت ایشان میکنند -

When the letter reached and the Shāh read it, he became astonished and said, "What clement disposition does Muhammad Humāyūn Pādishāh possess! These people were seeking his injury, but he intercedes for them. [Jauhar, B.M. MSS., Add. 16,711, fol. 79a.]

Also cf. his reply to the counsel of one of his officers to take possession of Rāja Māldeo's territory where Humāyūn's party was then taking shelter and had procured plentiful supply of grain and water :

اگر بفرض پادشاهی دے زمین بدهند من اینچنین کار قبیح نفران نمی کنم

If they were to give me the kingship of the whole world, I will not commit so foul a deed or be guilty of such ingratitude. [Ibid.]

² Cf. his reply to the counsel of his Generalissimo importuning him to kill Kāmārān who was in intrigue with Shēr Shāh, and seeking to dispossess Humāyūn of his kingdom :

exile and reverses in his fights with Shēr Shāh, is a glorious chapter in history and a splendid trait in his character. One sublime example of his tender, grateful, and generous nature, is to be found in the munificent reward that he gave to a poor water-carrier who had helped him with a sheep-skin when his horse had slipped from underneath him in crossing the Ganges at Chausa.¹ It is a romantic and almost برای این دنیاے ناپایدار برادر خود را از جان بیجان نمی کنم... و اینچنین کار ناشایسته از من نمی آید

For this perishable world I will not render my brother from life to lifeless, and such unworthy act will *not emanate from me. [Ibid., fol. 34b]

- ¹ Cf. the protests of his brothers against this measure, and its extreme inadvisability due to the grave risks involved in compelling his nobles to bow publicly to a menial at a time when danger from Shēr Shāh was threatening :

غرض آن غلام سقا را بر تخت نشاندند و حکم فرمودند که همه

To be brief, his Majesty made the slave water-carrier sit on the throne, and gave order that all the 'Umarā should make obeisance to that slave water-carrier, and the slave might bestow on any one whatever he liked and confer 'mansab.' Till two days his Majesty gave royalty to that

ORDERS TO HIS SECRETARY.

CHAPTER VII

A great tribute of praise is paid by some Persian and English historians to Shāh Tahmāsp for his very noble and generous reception of Humāyūn. Sir John Malcolm, the great historian and authority on Persian affairs, writes thus:

“The reign of Shāh Tahmāsp owes much of its celebrity to the truly royal and hospitable reception he gave to the Emperor Hoomāyoon, when that monarch was forced to fly from India and take shelter in his dominions. The Persians have in all ages boasted of their hospitality and the vanity of every individual is concerned in supporting the pretensions of his country to a superiority over others in the exercise of this national virtue; . . . and we know no example of a distressed monarch being so royally welcomed, so generously treated, and so effectually relieved. All means of the kingdom were called forth to do honour to the royal guest; and they were as liberally furnished to replace him upon his throne. Tahmāsp merited the praise which his conduct upon this occasion obtained him from distant nations.”¹

This is an exaggerated, and to an extent erroneous account of the reception and the help given to Humāyūn. It is neither supported by reference to any historical source, nor its validity sufficiently tested. Persian writers also, especially of later date, express such views which similarly are based on no historical data. Some observations from “the artless and transparently truthful narrative of Humāyūn’s personal attendant Jauhar,” are reproduced below:

Mis-judgment of Sir John.

NOTE.—The help eventually given by the Shāh consisted of several thousand foot and cavalry which dispersed soon after the conquest of Qandhār, with all its treasures surrendered to them. Humāyūn then recruited fresh soldiers with whose help he was able to conquer Cābul, and there studiously busied himself from four to five years in making special preparations for his attack on India. He sent rich presents to all the great chiefs of Qandhār, Samarqand, Bukhārā, and other towns, inviting them to join him in his expedition, giving them great hopes for the future. It was to this newly raised army led under his command after five years of his return from Persia that he virtually owes his throne of India. Cf. his ‘masnawī’ quoted on p. 18 supra. Also, Cf. Jauhar, fol. 127a:

existence.

Early in the morning the Shāh (Tahmāsp) having marched, arrived and halted at Sul-tāniyā. His Majesty (Humāyūn) had gone to greet him, but seeing no attention paid to himself was grieved at heart, and began to accuse himself, saying, "Would that I had not come!" And for the entertainment of his Majesty they had collected some firewood. The Shāh sent a verbal message, saying, "If you enter into our religion we will extend our support, otherwise with all your co-religion-ists we shall burn you alive in this pile of wood." His Majesty returned the message, "we are firm in our religion; we came; and we do not entertain much desire even for kingship. And whatever there is, it is with the will of God—the Great, and the High. We have bound our heart to Him."

Humāyūn
approached by Shāh Tahmāsp
to accept the Shī'a faith.

Shortly afterwards Humāyūn was approached through a special messenger of the Shāh to accept the Shī'a faith under a similar threat :

قاضي جهان وکیل حضرت شاه در ملازمت حضرت
پادشاه آمد عرض کرد که شما تنها نیستید از سبب شما
قریب هفت صد کس کشته خواهند شد

Qāzī Jahān, the Vakīl of the Shāh, came to his Majesty and said, "You are not alone. On your account about seven hundred people will be put to death."

Apart from this, Shāh Tahmāsp was all the time actually thinking to take Humāyūn's life which was saved only through a happy accident. The Shāh revealed his secret to his son Bahrām Mirzā, who out of compassion divulged it to his sister through whose tender pleadings the situation was changed, and to whose truly noble spirit Humāyūn owes his life and all his subsequent career :

To be brief, one day the Shāh talked with Bahrām Mīrzā of the killing of Humāyūn.

^۱ Ibid., foll. 76a—76b.

From this speech the Mirzā being overcome with grief wept, and divulged this affair to his sister saying, "Humāyūn Pādishāh from the progeny of Timūr Pādishāh has come on foot with all hopes, and some period has elapsed since we have eaten the salt together. At this time the Shāh ordered a wrong thing." When this chaste lady heard this speech she burst into tears. In the meantime the Shāh entered her house. Bahrām Mirzā saluted him and went out. And the Shāh halted and asked what was the reason for her crying. She said, "I weep on my day." The Shāh again said, "Wish our welfare." She said, "I am always busy in my prayer for your Majesty, but you have on all the four sides enemies. And it is heard that Muhammad Humāyūn Pādishāh has a son and brothers. What good should come to hand by torturing him? If you do not take pity on his affairs and exalt and help him, you should bid him farewell, so that whatever place he knows of he may go to." The Shāh listened to this speech and got pacified in that moment, and said, "All the 'Umarā expressed their unwise policies, but there is nothing better than what thou sayest."

CHAPTER VIII

During Humāyūn's reign, poets and scholars from all parts of Persia, Turkistān, Bukhārā, and Samarqand, continued to emigrate to India in larger numbers than before.

Besides those already mentioned, there were many, like Maulānā 'Abdul Bāqī

Sadr Turkistānī, Mīr 'Abdul Hai

Bukhārī, Khwāja Hijrī Jāmī, Maulānā Bazmī, Mullā Muhammad Sālih, and Mullā Jān Muhammad, who accompanied Humāyūn on his second entry into Hindūstān.¹ The two popular poets Jāhī Yatmiyān of Bukhārā and Hairatī of Māwarā un Nahr had entered Humāyūn's service at Cābul, and received his favours. Similarly Khwāja Ayyūb from Māwarā un Nahr, Maulānā Nādirī from Samarqand, and Maulānā Junūbī from Badakhshān, all journeyed from their homes to Āgra, and received mansabs.

Astrābādī, Shaikh Abul Wājid Fāriḡhī Shirāzī, and Shauqī Tabrizī, came actually from the Persian towns and the Safawī court itself which, de facto, did not rise to the height of the munificence of the Indian courts in their patronage of Persian prose and poetry.¹ The last-named, Shauqī Tabrizī, who was

- ¹ Poets under the Safawī, were on an average, paid from 20 to 30 'tūmans' for their 'qasāid' and eulogies of the court. There is one instance discovered of a panegyrist of Shāh 'Abbās, the Great—Shāhī Taklū—who was once weighed in gold for his beautiful poetry, and on his retirement from the Shāh's service got a stipend of 20 'tūmans' a month (a sum equal to sixty rupees). Against this solitary instance of Persian munificence, a good many brighter ones of Indian courts may be quoted: Cf.—
- (i) Zuhūrī receiving several elephants loaded with gold and silver and other rich presents for his Sāqī Nāma in praise of Burhān Nizām Shāh of Ahmadnagar. [Sar-Kush, Kalimāt ush Shu'arā—account of Zuhūrī.]
 - (ii) 'Urfī receiving from the Khān i Khānān 100,000 rupees in reward for a 'qasīda.' [Ibid., Account of Khān i Khānān.]
 - (iii) Hayātī Kāshī was weighed in gold by Jahāngīr for his verses on the style of Khusrāu's Tughlaq Nāma. So also, Sa'īdā i Gilānī. [Tuzuk i Jahāngīrī. p. 240.]
 - (iv) Abū Talīb Kalīm, Sa'īdā i Gilānī, and Bāfiyā, all weighed in gold by Shāh Jahān.
 - (v) Maulvī 'Ābdul Hakim Siālkōtī weighed twice in gold.
 - (vi) Ābdul Hamīd Lāhorī, author of Shāh Jahān Nāma, was similarly weighed in gold, in addition to receiving a large sum in cash, on completion of his history.

an organ of the poetical assemblies arranged by Sām Mirzā, at the Safawī court, had left the Prince's service only to enter Humāyūn's.¹ Similarly Shaikh Abul Wājid Fārighī who came from Shīrāz, was a pauper, and had not with him even a pair of spare clothes to put on except the one ragged old garment which he had on his body.² A good many poets and scholars came after Shāh Tahmāsp, in the reign of Shāh 'Abbās, the Great. The one notable example is that of Masih Ruknā i Kāshī, who is reckoned among the best poets of Persia in his day, and was the chief poet of the court of Shāh 'Abbās. The Shāh not only failed to extend the patronage he deserved, but on one occasion even thought the favour he was showing him was too much for a poet, in consequence of which he left the court and came away to India in the reign of Akbar. This is the age when the liberalities of the Deccan and the Mughal kings in jealous rivalry with each other were attracting, more than they did ever before, the Persian poets and scholars from the remote corners of Persia, and the Western and Central Asia. Not only the Mughal kings but their 'Umarā too, extended an equal patronage to these literate emigrants, who in their turn sang praises of their benefactors in their beautiful poems which resounded in Persia and served as an impetus to others who yet lagged behind. This is one of the main reasons why the literary activities at the Indian courts in the field of Persian literature outweigh those of the Persians in Persia. The elegant poetry written in this and the later periods, and the useful literature produced in the shape of histories, translations from Sanskrit and Hindī works, biographies of poets, and dictionaries of Persian language and idiom, stand a contrast and a marvel to Persia.

Various explanations are offered by Persian writers for the non-appearance of any great poets in Persia under the Safawī rule. As a matter of fact both the 16th and the 17th centuries were notably poor in the number and the quality of poets produced in Persia. The chief reason for this lull, as pointed out by Iskandar Munshi—the celebrated historian of Shāh 'Abbās, the Great, was the change in the mentality of the Shāh and of the people from the panegyric to the religious poetry or Muharram mournings which constitute strophes in praise of the

Martyrs: Imām Hasan, and Imām Husain.¹ The same view is endorsed by subsequent Persian and English chroniclers.² It is also declared that the panegyrists were not tolerated by the Persian kings, and consequently no poets of note appeared at their court; and even if they did, they were discouraged and no reward was held out to them for their eulogies. The Safawīs, we are told, maintained that the person of the Imāms and not that of the kings was worthy of the encomiums of the poets.

While all this may be admitted as a distraction, it cannot at the same time be any real reason for the following considerations: First, that the panegyrists did exist under each of the Safawī kings, and received rewards for their encomiums on the person of the Shāh; and second, that the 'marsiyas' (or the Muharram mournings) did not and could not in the least stop other kinds of poetry. The production of the former as compared with the latter is only a drop in the ocean. The poet Qāsimī, for instance, was a panegyrist of Shāh Ismā'īl, and was rewarded no less for his 'Qasā'id' than for his other poems, of which, however, none was in praise of their contention.

² Cf. Browne, Persian Literature in Modern Times, pp. 172-3.

the Imāms.¹ The highest reward which he got was for his poem entitled 'Shāh Nāma i Shāh Ismā'īl' written in imitation of Firdausi's Shāh Nāma in extravagant praise of the Shāh. After Shāh Ismā'īl's death, he stayed for some time at the court of Shāh Tahmāsp, and possibly by the latter's desire wrote a similar poem entitled 'Shāh Nāma i Shāh Tahmāsp' in his praise. In the latter part of his life he repaired to India, being attracted by the liberalities of the Mughal court, and was graciously received by Akbar.

Among the court poets of Shāh Tahmāsp, besides Qāsimi (who came over to India), there were many, of whom Shauqī Tabrizī (who followed suit), Zamīrī, 'Abdī, and Muhtasham Kāshī, were conspicuous. Muhtasham poured unqualified praise on the Shāh, which not only was admitted but justly rewarded by the latter. The Persian biographer, Lutf 'Alī Bēg Azar, describes him as a panegyrist of the Shāh, and a prominent figure among the poets of the Safawī court :

سر آمد شعراے فصاحت شعار آن روزگار و مداح
شاه طهماسب صفوی است -

² Atashkada, p. 331.

He is the head of the eloquent poets of that period, and a panegyrist of Shāh Tahmāsp Safawī.

Some specimens, showing the nature of praises showered by him from time to time on the person of the Shāh, are reproduced below:

شہ گیتی ستان طہماسپ آں کز بیم رزم او
تن پیل دمان کا ہد دل شیر ژیان لرزد
اگر نغفور چین آید بقصد آستان بوش
ز چین ابروے دربان آں بر آستان لرزد

The king—conqueror of the world—Tahmāsp, is such that from the fear of his battle,
The body of the fierce elephant diminishes, and the heart of the ferocious lion
shivers ;

If the emperor of China comes with the intent to bow at his threshold,
From the scowl of the porter of that threshold, he trembles.

² Ibid.

NOTE.—This is in poor imitation of Anwari's famous 'qasida' in praise of Sultān Sanjar, beginning :

گر دل و دست بحر و کن باشد * دل و دست خدا یگان باشد
شاہ شنجہر کہ کمترین خدمش * در جہان پادشہ نشان باشد

شاه طهماسب آنکه در سپهش
 همچو سنجر هزار خاں باشد
 آنکه از صدمت عدالت او
 دزد چاوش کاروان باشد
 وانکه از هیبت سیاست او
 گرگ باغی سگ شبان باشد
 چون عنان فرس بجنبانی
 ریشه در جسم انس و جان باشد
 هم درنگ تو یک زمان در جنگ
 مهلت صد هزار جان باشد
 من چنان شمع معنی افروزم
 انوری مستنیر آن باشد

Till body be the monopoly of the hand of the soul,

That hand be the hand of the king ;
 Shāh Tahmāsp is such that in his army,
 Like Sanjar there are thousand Khāns ;
 He is such that from the dread of his justice,

The thief is the herald of a Kāravān ;
 And he is such that through the fear of his chastisement,

The lawless wolf is the dog of a shepherd ;
 When thou givest motion to the rein of thy steed,

Paralysis overtakes the body of man and genii ;

Thy delay for a moment in battle,
Is a respite to a hundred thousand lives ;
I am such a candle, enlightener of meaning,
That Anwarī seeks light therefrom.

Side by side with this he also wrote his famous 'Haft-band' in praise of the Imāms. Zamīri is another who began his career as a poet in Shāh Tahmāsp's reign, and produced volumes of secular poetry in which respect no other poet in the whole of Persia could compete with him.¹ 'Abdī is yet another who carried the palm in his lavishness of praise on Shāh Tahmāsp. Besides the usual 'qasā'id,' he wrote a long panegyric on the Shāh, entitled 'Būstān i Khī-yāl'² (the garden of imagination), also called 'Haftkhi-zāna.' A specimen from same will easily reveal the tendency of the Shāh's taste as also that of the poets at his court :

Shāh Tahmasp.

In the following the poet refers to a 'mansab' which he got from the Shāh in appreciation of secular poems consisting of 'qasā'id,' and 'masnawī,' and 'ghazal,' all of which proceeded from his pen as a sequel to the Shāh's patronage. In the third verse, in which he observes that his poetry was up till then in abeyance, he emphatically denies that it was due to any sense of shame for writing poetry :

بدیوان اعلیٰ چو بشتافتم¹

Every one who had lustre from the praise of a king,
 Became the possessor of world like the blessed sun ;
 Any one whose poetry was not based on praise,
 His worth was not much recognised in the world ;
 Again, from the poets of yore,
 The best chapter which proceeded was that of praise ;
 All commenced their records from the name of the renowned,
 From the praise of kings they warmed their assemblies ;
 To me also it becomes agreeable, that my poetic collection,

 بود جائے سلطان حسینش نشست
 چو مملوح من از همه برتر است
 مرا در سکن رتبه دیگر است
 من آنروز گشتم چو خسرو سمر
 که از جوهر فرد نام خبر

Similarly Shāh 'Abbās, the Great, had his panegyrists, one of whom, Shāhī Taklū, his favourite poet, was weighed in gold for the following beautiful verse, and received his weight for his reward.

۱ اگر دشمن کشد ساغر و گر دوست
 بطاق ابرو مستانه اوست

Whether an enemy drinks a cup of wine, or does a friend,
 Both do so at the arc of his tipsy eye-brow.

At this, other poets showed jealousy, and wrote versified complaints to the Shāh, indirectly challenging the merits of their lucky comrade. The one written by Mullā Lutfi, another panegyrist of the Shāh's court, is well-worth quoting :

شاهها ز کرم جهان منور کردی^۱
 ملک دل عالمی مستخر کردی

O king, thou hast illumined the world with thy generosity,
 Thou hast captured the kingdom of the heart of a whole world ;
 The poet who had become equal to the dust of the path (i.e., whose merits were as low as dust),
 Thou hast picked him up, and made him equal with gold.

Still more prominent was Hakīm Ruknuddīn, popularly known as Hakīm Ruknā i Kāshī, who composed under the pen-name 'Masīh' which suggests with his profession as a physician.² He was a competent poet and wrote over one lac (100,000) of verses according to the estimate of Persian biographers. On one occasion he noticed clear inattention and disregard on the part of Shāh 'Abbās (vide supra, p. 151), and consequently left his court for that of the Mughal, with the following verse addressed to the Shāh :

گر فلک يك صبحدم بامن گراں باشد سرش
شام بیرون میروم چو آفتاب از کشورش

If the sky on a single morn makes its head
heavy against me,
That very evening I walk out like the sun
from its dominion.

He arrived at the Mughal court with his famous contemporary—Hakīm Sadrā of Shīrāz—(who subsequently had his title of 'Masihuz Zamān' conferred upon him by Jahāngīr), in the last days of Akbar, and was received by 'Abdurrahīm, Khān i Khānān, who took them to the court. Jahāngīr mentions them among his state physicians.²

About the same time another poet Shakībī Isfahānī left his native town for Āgra to enter the service of the Khān i Khānān.³ Two of his verses from

² Tuzuk i Jahāngīrī, p. 19.

³ It is to be noted that the rewards by Khān i Khānān exceeded a lac of rupees. In addition to this, the latter secured for him a permanent jāgir from Jahāngīr's government.

Sāqī Nāma which he wrote in grateful acknowledgment of his master's liberal patronage are worthy of notice :

بیا ساقی آن آب حیوان بده
 ز سر چشمه خان خانان بده
 سکندر طلب کرد لیکن نیافت
 که در هند بود اوبه ظلمت شتافت

Come, o cup-bearer, give me that water of nectar,
 Give me from the stream of the Khān i Khānān ;
 Alexander sought for it but did not get,
 For it was in India and he went in the region of darkness.

In the face of such strong evidences there remains little doubt that the real cause of this lull in the activities of poets in Persia is not in what is so easily explained by a certain class of writers. It surely lies in some other quarter. A Persian poet of the reign of Shāh Tahmāsp wittily points out the reason of this lack, as resulting from the Shāh's attention being paid to calligraphy, painting, and riding, in the following verse :

¹ Bayāz-i-Mirzā Asad Bēg Turkmān, MSS., dated, Āgra, 8th Safar, 1146 A. H., fol. 76a. [My attention was first drawn to this work by Prof. A. Qavī, Fāni, M.A., of Lucknow University, who also very kindly permitted the use of his copy which I believe is rare.]

بے تکلف خوش ترقی کرده اند
کاتب و نقاش و قزوینی و خـ

Without trouble they have made a good progress,
The scribe, the painter, the Qazwīnī, and the ass.

Another sober and somewhat stronger evidence of the lack of patronage to poets in Persia is to be found in the verse of Lisānī Shīrāzī, who was a contemporary of Shāh 'Ismā'il and Shāh Tahmāsp. On one occasion when he happened to go to Tabriz, he composed a 'qasida' in praise of Amīr Najm, II, wherein he complained as follows :

مے من صافی و ارباب مروت بے ذوق
ز من بیغش و صراف سخن نابینا

My wine is pure, but the possessors of sympathy are devoid of taste,
My gold is unalloyed, but the banker of speech (judge) is blind.

¹ Prof. Browne (quoting from Ahsanut Tawārikh), Persian Literature in Modern Times, A.D. 1500—1924, p. 97.

Cf. his remark :

According to the Ahsanut Tawārikh, Shāh Tahmāsp was in his youth much interested in calligraphy and painting ; he also liked riding on Egyptian asses, which consequently became fashionable, and were adorned with golden trappings and gold-embroidered saddle-cloths.

² Bayāz-i-Mīrzā Asad Bēg, fol. 57b, ut supra.

The above view finds further support in the utterance of another poet Kausari of the court of Shāh 'Abbās, the Great. While extolling in the usual manner the virtues of the Shāh' in the masnawī entitled 'فرهاد و شیرین' (Farhād wa Shīrīn), the poet describes the dull atmosphere obtained in Persia, as compared with India, in the following plain and unmistakable language :

شکایت کم توجہی اہل ایران باریاب معانی^۱
 دریں کشور خریدار سخن نیست
 کسے سر گرم بازار سخن نیست
 سخن را قدر و مقدارے نماندہ
 معانی را خریدارے نماندہ

Complaint¹ for the inattention of the people of ān towards the possessors of meaning (i.e., poets) :

 was a favourite of Shāh 'Abbās, and a writer of elegies on the Imāms. Cf.:

patronage to poets.¹ The result of this appreciation was that the fire of poetic genius of the nation, which had for so long burnt low in poets under sullen despondency, sparkled out once more and lit up the horizon of that country. Simultaneously with it, emigration to India considerably diminished.² The most notable poet that Persia in this new era produced was Qā'ānī, who is justly regarded both in India and Persia as the last great poet of Persian language.³

¹ Cf.—

- (i) Prince Hasan 'Alī Mirzā "Shujā' us Saltanat," Governor of Khurāsān—patronised Qā'ānī, Farūghī, and others.
- (ii) Hājī Mirzā Āqāsī, "Nāib us Saltanat" Prime Minister of Muhammad Shāh—also a patron of poets.
- (iii) Mirzā Taqī Khān, better known as "Amīr i Kabīr" eulogised by Qā'ānī in numerous "qasā'id" for his munificent liberalities to poets.

² Cf. other causes :

- (i) Gradual replacement of Persian by Urdū, and its official recognition as the court language under the English.
- (ii) Patronage shown by the Mughal princes and other nobles to Urdū poets.

³ The one prominent figure in modern Persian poetry, which begins roughly from the latter half of the 16th century A.D., is the epoch-making Qā'ānī the Shelley of Persia, as we may call him. No other poet is to be found in the whole range of Persian verse so rich in the vividness of imagery, the exquisite mastery over style, and above all, in the glow and verve of idiom and naturalness of simile and metaphor, as he. Qā'ānī's descriptions are some of the most consummate that exist in the Persian

The chief causes, which appear more likely to be at the root, were : (i) the attention of the Safawī to political, social, and above all, religious reform (which, being of a drastic and fanatical nature, led to a general persecution of the literati in Persia), on the one hand ; and (ii) the patronage shown by the Mughal in India, on the other. The Mughal language. Every line of his displays that fulness of detail and eye for close observation which characterise his writings. His descriptive poems stand out not only in his own composition but in the Persian verse as a whole. His poetry is confined chiefly to Qasīda, Khamsa, Qit'a and Mutā'iba, on topics of love, natural scenery, and praises and satires of kings and dignitaries. A few lines from his Khamsa may be quoted here by way of specimen, which specially appeal to every student of Nature, a parallel of which is hard to find in the East among poets of Persian language, but is frequently met with in the West in English poets like Tennyson, Shelley, and Wordsworth :

دیدۀ نرگس بباغ باز چو سیما ب شد
طرۀ سنبل براغ باز پر از تاب شد
آب فسردۀ چو سیم باز چو سیما ب شد باد بهاری بجست زعورۀ دی آب شد given by any English poet without hesitation. For example compare one stanza from the Adonais of Shelley :

The airs and streams renew their joyous tone ;
 The ants, the bees, the swallows reappear ;
 Fresh leaves and flowers deck the dead season's bier ;
 The amorous birds now pair in every brake,
 And build their mossy homes in field and brake ;
 And the green lizard and the golden snake,
 Like unimprisoned flames, out of their trance awake.

Qā'ānī's poetry with its wonderful ease and flow does not appear to belong to the era in which he lived, but exhibits a taste which prevailed in the early and the middle ages. His fidelity to nature combined with the charm of Rūdakī and Zahrī, the pathos of Nizāmī, and the vivacity and animation of Farrukhī and Manuchahrī, preponderates in his composition, and in this respect he appears to be a poet more of the 12th and 13th centuries than of the 19th when he actually lived. Even in his figurative indulgence, which is a characteristic of the 17th and 18th century poets, his supremacy over his colleagues is marked in so far as he has kept aloof from the vices rampant in their composition. His artistic display of the language, and his metaphor and simile have a charm and a reality which do not exist in the work of modern poets, and were long displaced by frivolous attempts at word and meaning, and the inordinate figurative touches which had disfigured the fair face of Persian poetry in the later age. In Qā'ānī, therefore, we have a revival of the middle and early poetry, and he may be justly said to represent Farrukhī, Manuchahrī, and Zahrī in the 19th century.

being attracted by its superior literary support. It is by this process and the force of Qā'ānī's elegies are also famous for their originality of form, and style of address. They are a deviation from the old established path in a more conspicuous form than is exhibited in his panegyric poetry. Some specimen lines from his elegy on Imām Husain are quoted below :

“Qā’ānī,” says Browne, “is by general consent the most notable poet produced by Persia in the 19th century. He is one of the most melodious of all the Persian poets, and his command of the language is wonderful, but he lacks high aims and noble principles.”

The latter remark of the learned critic is mainly due to the allegation that Qā’ānī was of short temper, and his pen did not desist from disparaging those whom he had once praised in his gasā’id. In support of this contention Browne quotes one instance of Hājī Mīrzā Āqāsī, who, during his supreme Governorship of Khurāsān, was extolled for his piety and justice by Qā’ānī. But when the Mīrzā fell from power, having incurred the displeasure of the emperor Muhammad Shāh, and his Ministerial rank and authority passed on to another noble “Lisān ul Mulk” Mīrzā Taqī Khān, better known as “Amīr i Kabīr,” Qā’ānī, for reasons not yet fully disclosed, discredited the former and praised the latter thus :

خوشب کامشب اے صنم خوریم مے بیادجم
 کز گشته دولت عجب قوی چو کوهسارها
 ز سعی صدر نامور مہین امیر دادگر

That the pious believers take pride in him.

Qā'ānī purged the Persian poetry from that irksome hyperbole and laboured and pedantic style which the later poets, during the last two centuries before him had commonly adopted as their motto. His verses are full of pathos and spontaneous and natural tendencies as opposed to a terse and affected style formed by clever devices, subtleties of figures of speech, and rhymed diction. His distinctive feature of writing, and the reforms he introduced in the art of versification, are summed up as follows :

- (i) Abstention from fatuous and abortive exaggeration in his flight of thought as could be seen in the following lines reproduced here by way of sample :

دردزوری کہ دم زنی از حزم و احتیاط
او کز بادبان کند این کز لنگر غیر از رشائے شاه کہ جوید بجان و دل

thing, language, custom, fashion, food and dress, was adopted after the Persian style and taste.

- (ii) Remarkable felicity of expression and naturalness of his simile and metaphor, as contained in the following lines :

ز خاک رستہ لالہا چو بُسَدیں پیا لہا
ببرگ لالہ ژالہا چو در شفق ستارہا
ز ریش سحابہا بر آبہا حبابہا

It is a fact, historically true, that the Persian language had not gained so complete a hold on the

- (iii) His pun and figures of speech are more spontaneous, graceful, and dignified in character, than those of his contemporaries who are content merely with the ornate diction and display of words at the sacrifice of good taste. A few instances are quoted below :

کف کریمش از بس قناده در یتیم
یتیم ساخته پروردگار عمار را

- (iv) Continuity and fulness in his description, with faithful representation of the subject, which is wonderfully attractive and appealing to heart :

- (v) His productive, rich, and luxuriant style, with his wonderful command of the language, is more than what could be achieved by any Persian poet during the last two centuries

the advent of Bābur, which is synchronous with the before him. This is evident from the sweetness inherent in his poetry, and his uses of verbs with their auxiliaries in distinctive and varied meanings, which have acquired the bearing and stamp of idiom. For instance, he uses the verb افتد in so many flexible ways and with such clever turns that one cannot but admire his ijtihad. The following lines deserve special notice:

اے خواہا وقت کہ از غایت مستیش سخن
 ہمچہ سرما زدہ در کم بکزار افتد
 بے خطا گفتم و شاہ از ہمہ حال آگاہست
 می نخواهد کہ ہمیں پردہ ز اسرار افتد
 ہم خداوند و ہم شاہ از ہمہ حال آگاہست
 ایں چنین رندی و قلشی بسیار افتد
 چون بر ابنائے جہاں بار خدا ستار است
 لاجرم سایۂ او باید ستار افتد

- (vi) He was a genius, and proficient in three languages, Turkish, French, and Arabic and made a free use of their vocabulary in his poetical composition, more than any other poet of Persia ever did before.
- (vii) He uses many redundant words (زوائد) with the air of a Mujtahid. Not only stray instances of same are to be met with in his poetry here and there, as is the case with other poets, but that he picks up a word and makes it a regular دیف, e.g., cf., his long qasida beginning with:

آمد بہ برم دوش یکے سادہ پسر بر
 و ز مشک فرو ہشتہ دو گیسو بقر بر

He also invented and introduced stammering poems, depicting in words the halting articulations, stops and rapid repetitions of a habitual stammerer. It was a bold step for him to take in the 19th century, which no other poet ventured before him

Safawi persecution, as it did afterwards.

- (viii) The sweetness and melody inherent in his qasīda is most remarkable, and presents a new phase in the art of qasīda-writing, which originally belonged to ghazal.
 - (ix) He widened the scope of Persian poetry by allowing جملات and admitting obsolete words and new sets of compounds and constructions in his composition, a step which befitted him as an امام or a recognised leader of poets.
 - (x) He is a great force in the field of 19th century Persian literature. His style characterised by freshness of expression, rejuvenation of thought, and naturalness of simile, is unique in the life and literature of Qajar Persia. Nay, the service rendered by him to Persian poetry as a whole, is most remarkable, and stands by itself.
 - (xi) He revived the poetry of the early and the middle age, and combined in his qasīda the merits of Rūdakī Farrukhī, Manuchahrī, Anwārī, and Zāhīr, adding to them a charm all his own. He thus raised the standard and dignity of Persian poetry, which had fallen so low in Persia since after the coming away of Abu Talib Kalīm to India, and is regarded as the last great poet of Persian language, a position justified by his prolific and many-sided genius.
 - (xii) In prose, his work “کتاب پریشان” written after the manner and style of Sa‘di’s Gulistan, is a reflection and a blot on his good name, and does him no credit as a prose-writer. It is full of scurrilous anecdotes, and reveals his easy life and freedom of thought which he loved so well.

CHAPTER IX

Wave of pessimism in the latter part of his life due to the influence of religious atmosphere obtained in India.

Sūfism and renunciation. His growing desire for the company of the devout, and his aversion to this material world, had manifested themselves too clearly on several occasions. His frequent visits to the tombs of saints, and his association with the Sūfīs of the time, and taking auguries from the Dīwan of Hāfiz on important matters of state, domestic, and personal, was for the most part under the influence of the Indian atmosphere during his stay in Hindūstān, which was already a most noted country in the East for spiritual progress and the religious activities of its people. The Persian mysticism, since its very advent in India, had found a warm reception by the religious-minded populace ; and this joint working of Muslim thought with the Hindū zeal for devotional practices, aiming at the purification of the soul, had created a spiritual atmosphere, the effects of which no foreigner, however stiff-hearted and indifferent he might be, could escape. Jauhar, Gulbadan Begum, and other contemporary and later historians, have quoted instances of his pessimistic views. The one recorded by Abul Fazl is reproduced as follows :

And often times passed on the holy tongue of the late king (whose abode is in Paradise), the talk of travel to the next world ; and against his old pleasing habit, this talk which is opposed to the orderly government of this world, and which he did not like to be mentioned in his sublime assembly before, he was pleased with its mention in these days. Verily, since on the heart of the secret-knowing king, the effects of such thoughts had already cast their shadows, therefrom the king did one day praise and vouchsafe for the truthful utterance of the late conqueror, Firdaus-Makānī (Bābur), saying, that Firdaus-Makānī once in his assembly mentioned that a certain servant of his said one day, "Whenever the sleeping Yard of the Cemetery of Ghaznī comes into my sight, I am inclined to die." And after this, the king added, "When I see Delhi and its tombs I recollect the speech of the late king—how nice and true he said !" And near about the time when he was to turn his face towards the eternal kingdom, he addressed to some of his attendants, "Today, after the morning prayers, something happened, and the angel of inspiration put this quatrain on my tongue :—

O God, with Thy plentiful grace select me journey until his reaching Delhī and the conquest of Hindūstān, having abstained from all animal food, sought victory through spiritual attentions, evinced the greatest pleasure today.

Along with his abstinence from the animal food, he also used to take auguries from the Dīwān of Hāfiz,¹

¹ The practice of consulting omens from the dīwān of Hāfiz was prevalent in Persia also. The belief of the Persians in tafāwul was so great that they gave the names of Lisān'-ul-Ghaib (Invisible tongue), and Tarjumān-ul-Asrār (Interpreter of mysteries), to Hāfiz's dīwān. Like the Mughal emperors in India, the Persian royal house also, in spite of their disbelief in the Sunnī tarīqat and in Sūfīs, used to take auguries from the dīwān on important private and official matters. The Latīfa i Ghai-biyya (a book written by a Persian noble and poet of the town of Dīrāb, printed at Tīhrān in 1304 A.H.) mentions several instances of such auguries drawn from Hāfiz by the Persian kings. Cf.—

- (i) Shāh Isma'īl I, the promulgator of the Shi'a faith in Persia, who even went to the length of destroying the tombs of Sūfīs, decided to consult Hāfiz's dīwān about the destruction of the latter's tomb. The result of this augury was the following verse :

جواز سحر نهاد حمایل برابرم یعنی غلام شاهر و سوگند می خورم

- (ii) Shāh Tahmāsp one day lost his ring, and consulted Hāfiz which opened at the following verse :

دلے کہ غیب نمایست و جلم جلم دارد ز خائے کہ دمی گم شود چه غم دارد

believing in their efficacy, just as the ancient Romans used to consult Vergil, when they were in doubt as to the proper course of action to be pursued by them. While yet in Cābul, after his return from Persia, he consulted the dīwān about his success in his impending attack on Hindūstān, to regain his lost kingdom from Shēr Shāh. A detailed account of this augury and his personal faith in its efficacy, is given in the following extract :

عنان عزیمت والا بصوب صواب ممالک هندوستان
معطوف فرمودند و آن نور پرورد ایزدی یعنی حضرت

- (iii) Similarly, Shāh Abbās II, like Humāyūn, once took an augury from Hāfiz's dīwān regarding the conquest of Azarbāijān, of which the capital is Tabriz. The following verse was the remarkable response :

عراق و فارس گرتی بشعر خرد حافظ
بیا که نوبی بغداد و رقی نبویز است

¹. Ibid., p. 409.

NOTE.—The difference in the Persian and the Indian method of taking auguries may be noted :—In India, the popular method is to open the dīwān, after reciting fātiha with or without durūd, and invoking its blessings on the departed soul of Hāfiz. The first verse of the open page on the right is generally taken as Hāfiz's response to the query. If the answer is not clear, the 7th line of the same page is the next best verse to be counted upon. But if neither gives satisfaction, six further pages are turned, and the first verse of the 7th page is accepted as final.

In Persia the method of opening the dīwān at random is more common, and the condition of reciting fātiha is not considered necessary, though durūd is generally read simultaneously with opening the book. Some take the first line on which the eye falls, be it on the right or on the left page ; while others consider the first verse of the ode, which begins on the right page, as the proper answer.

شدند اما دوربینان بارگاه دانش فکوائی این نظم

 که بسه هزار کشند بمعاضدت بسیاری از جنود غیبی
 که بشمار مکاسبان عقول نگنجد نهضت فرمودند -

In the above-quoted extract one could see the wonderful effect exercised by the miraculous verse of Hāfiz. Not only it filled the heart of Humāyūn and his generals with hope, but that the confidence it infused was so great that he marched without even adequate preparation with a number less than 3000 foot and cavalry all told,¹ on such a big mission as the re-conquest of Hindūstān.

One day, when he was out for hunting in Cābul, he expressed to his nobles the anxiety of his mind to regain his lost throne, and consulted them as to the advisability of leading an attack on India with the meagre men and material he could collect. Those who had lived in India in the heyday of his fortune, and enjoyed the comfort and wealth of the country, offered to consult the old method of divination, viz., to send a courier ahead, who should go and return after taking down the names of the first three persons he meets. The king readily consented to this and sent three horsemen, instead of one, all in the direction of Hindūstān but separate from one another, who were to return immediately after meeting the first person each, and report to him their names individually. The first brought the news that he met a trader named دولت fortune. The other said that he met a traveller by name, دلمه object of the heart. The third reported that he came across a peasant whose name was سعادت auspiciousness. The conclusion drawn was that the king should immediately start upon his campaign, unmindful of the number of his army, as success was sure to attend on him. He therefore put himself to this task at once and invited recruits who readily responded to his call under the said belief. Thus in the month of Safar in 962 A.H., he marched from Cābul, and was joined by many veteran soldiers on his way to Hindūstān.

His keen sense of giving justice to the poor against the high-handedness of the officials had led the invention of tabl-i-'adl (or drum of justice), which he had ordered to be placed in the outside corridor of the royal palace. Any one from the highest to the humblest in life could approach him without fear of molestation, and use that drum to draw the attention of the king in person, towards the tyranny shown to him by any official, enemy, robber, noble of the court. This mode of giving justice appreciated and copied by his successors in India, the most notable among whom was his grand-son Jahāngīr. He had a gold chain measuring 30 feet in length, with 60 bells, one end of which was fastened to the parapet of the royal dome of his fort at Agra, and the other to a mile-stone fixed on the bank of the Jamuna.² Humāyūn's drum of Justice is

A Persian yard.

Cf. Jahāngīr's own statement :

بعد از جلوس اولین حکمی که از من صادر گشت بستن زنجیر
عدل بود که اگر متصدیان مهمات دارالعدالت در داد خواهی و غور
رسی ستم رسیدگان و مظلومان اهل مال و مذهب و رزند آن مظلومان
خود را بدین زنجیر رسانیده سلسله چنبران کردند تا صدای آن باعث
آگاهی گردد - وضع آن برین نهج است - از طلای ناب فرمودم
زنجیری سازند طوایش سی فراع مشتمل بر شصت زنگ - وزن آن
چهار من یک سرش برکنگه شاه برج قلعه آگره استوار
ساخته بر دیگر تاکناره دریا برده بر میل سنگین که نصب شده بود محکم ساختند -

[Tuzuk i Jahāngīr]

described with its details of procedure by Abul Fazl as follows :—

۱ و از مخترعات آنحضرت طبل عدل بود که اگر دادخواهی را با کسی مخاصمت می شد یک نوبت چوب بر طبل میزد و اگر تظلم او از عدم وصول علوفه بود دو نوبت آن کار میکرد و اگر ما و جهات او را ظالمی غصب کرده بود یا دزد برده سه نوبت طبل را بغض آورد و اگر با کسی دعوی خون داشته چهار نوبت صدای طبل را بلند گردانید

And from amongst the inventions of his Majesty was the drum of Justice to the effect that if any seeker of redress had enmity with any one, he would strike the drum with the stick once ; and if he was oppressed for not supplying fodder, he would do this act twice ; and if his articles of subsistence were seized by some tyrant, or carried off by some thief, he would make the drum sound thrice ; and if against some one he had a claim for shedding blood (murder of his kinsmen), he would cause the drum to sound loud four times.

His generosity and benevolence were great ; and his clemency for his brothers, who proved a constant source of trouble and a menace to the peaceful government of his empire, was extraordinary, and carried beyond the limits of prudence and justice which he owed to the State. He was a lover of learning and a patron of poets and prose-writers of his day. He inherited from his father the poetic genius which is displayed in his masnawī, rubā'ī, and other metrical compositions. He was unostentatiously religious and his faith in providence was remarkable. In his days of fortune as well as in distress he did not lose the balance of mind, and remained happy in his submission to the will of God. In exile, when he was persuaded to embrace the Shi'a faith, in return for the promised Persian help to reinstate him on his lost throne of Hindūstān, he had uttered the following :

ما بدین خود قایم مقام هستیم، آمدیم، و ما را
چنداں آرزوے پادشاهی هم نیست و هرچه هست بارانۀ
خداے عزوجل است، دل خرد را به او بسته ایم -

We are firm in our religion. We came ; and we do not even entertain much desire for kingship. And whatever there is, it is with the will of God, the Great and the High. We have bound our heart to Him.

In battle he was valiant, and in peace his forgiving nature never yielded to any strict measures which the times demanded, not so much through weakness of mind as through gentleness and nobility of spirit.

During his flight through the sandy desert of Sindh, when his men were almost dying with thirst

His chivalry. and every one ran mad for water, news arrived of Shēr Shāh's troops' near approach. Humāyūn, at this juncture, ordered all his men, who were in a fit condition, to halt and engage the enemy in battle; while the rest whose condition was sore were directed to move forward to a safe distance with women and children 115 in number. He kept the command of the fighting force directly in his own hands, and rode in front like a warrior giving heart to his tired, unwilling, and ill-equipped men. The enemy, however, did not appear on the scene, and Humāyūn rode back to the female section to communicate the good news of the enemy's non-appearance.

Even in his fall he was great, and showed the same elevation of character as he did when he wore a crown.
